First Strike. Featured four times each year in The Numismatist, First Strike is a 16- to 24-page supplement addressing the special needs and interests of beginning collectors. By prior arrangement, additional supplements can be provided to coin clubs and schools to enhance educational programs or numismatically related activities. For more information about First Strike, contact the Publications Department.

Resource Center. Whether you choose to write, call or visit, you will find that the Resource Center at ANA's Colorado Springs headquarters is one of the most complete sources of numismatic information in the world. More than 30,000 titles about coins, paper money, tokens, medals, military orders and decorations, stocks and bonds, economics, banks and banking, and collecting are available to members through its circulating library. All aspects of world numismatics, both ancient and modern, are represented. The Resource Center also maintains a collection of audio-visual programs, videotapes and 35mm slide presentations.

ANA members can borrow these items for only the cost of postage and insurance. Visual education programs must be scheduled in advance for specific dates and must be returned immediately after use. Contact the Resource Center for more information about its circulating library.

Research Services. The Resource Center's professional staff can provide in-depth answers to your numismatic questions or can help identify coins from submitted photographs. Research services are available for $25 per hour, with a one-hour minimum. Users may specify a maximum monetary amount, or the Resource Center staff can provide an estimate of the time needed to complete a project. For further details, contact the Resource Center.

Authentication. The American Numismatic Association Authentication Bureau (ANAAB) offers independent, unbiased, professional opinions about the attribution and authenticity of numismatic items, including coins—U.S. and foreign—and medals, tokens and obsolete paper money. Authenticity determinations are made by experienced numismatists, using the most accurate research information available and state-of-the-art techniques. For more information, contact the ANA Authentication Bureau.

Mediation Services. ANA members and dealers must adhere to a strict code of ethics (see "Members' Code of Ethics" and "Dealers' Code of Ethics" in this handbook). Any member committing unethical acts in his dealings with other members, committing a criminal offense or engaging in conduct unbecoming a member is subject to expulsion from the ANA.

Members or dealers who are in violation of the Association's codes of ethics

Sandy Hill (standing) and Kathie Boucher of the Membership Department are ready to answer your questions about the ANA and its many services and benefits. Records are completely computerized, allowing fast, easy access to membership files.

Librarian Lynn Chen serves as your guide to the tens of thousands of books, catalogs and periodicals available through the ANA Resource Center.

should be reported to the ANA immediately. The Mediation Services Department will work with the complainant and the dealer to correct the problem. The service is free to members. For additional information about Mediation Services, consult "Complaints and Mediation" in this handbook.

Numismatic Correspondence Course. The ANA's numismatic correspondence course, "Introduction to Numismatics," allows collectors an opportunity to get a first-rate numismatic education in the comfort of their homes. The informative, illustrated workbook is priced at $59 for adults, $35 for juniors ($49 and $30, respectively, if purchased through an ANA member club). Questions regarding the numismatic correspondence course should be directed to the ANA MoneyMarket.

Club Network. Let the ANA put you in touch with coin clubs in your area. Consult the club listings in this handbook or call the Membership Department.

Government Representation. The American Numismatic Association endorses legislation beneficial to the numismatic hobby. ANA representatives play an active role in the legislative process, offering testimony concerning coin design and taxation. Your membership in the ANA adds strength to the voice of the industry.

Programs for Young Collectors. Keenly aware that youngsters are the future of the hobby, the ANA has developed a number of programs exclusively for young numismatists (YNs). Junior membership in the ANA is priced at a low $11 per year and includes all the benefits of adult membership. First Strike, a 16-page supplement appearing in The Numismatist four times a year, is geared toward beginning collectors, and the ANA's anniversary conventions always feature exciting activities for budding numismatists.

Education is the keynote of the ANA's YN program, with seminar scholarships available to young adults age 13 to 17. The numismatic correspondence course is offered to junior members at a discounted price. An extensive YN awards program has been created to encourage and recognize the accomplishments of young collectors. For additional information, contact the Educational Services Department.

Roman Coin Project. Participants in the Roman Coin Project can "earn" ancient coins simply by documenting their involvement in the hobby. Enrollment is free for junior members of the ANA; adult members must pay $12. Contact the Educational Services Department for further details.

MoneyMarket Catalog. Everyday numismatic products, as well as novelty items and professional-quality equipment, can be ordered from the MoneyMarket Catalog, issued periodically by the ANA Museum Store. To receive a free copy of the most recent catalog, contact the ANA Museum Store.

Educational Conferences & Seminars. The American Numismatic Association's Educational Services Department conducts a week-long Summer Conference as well as three-day seminars. The 1993 Summer Conference is scheduled to be held in Colorado Springs and features a variety of classes that appeal to all interests. The seminars offer a hands-on approach to U.S. coin grading. To obtain information about 1993 programs, contact the Educational Services Department.

Conventions. The ANA sponsors two conventions a year. These nationally acclaimed events spotlight the very best of the numismatic hobby—hundreds of the world's most noted numismatic professionals, fascinating exhibits, educational programs, activities and tours for young and old, meetings of specialty organizations, and an opportunity to visit with old friends and make new ones. Consult the Convention Office for details about upcoming shows.

Museum. The Association's headquarters in Colorado Springs houses a world-class museum, open to the public Monday through Friday (open Saturdays from Memorial Day to Labor Day). Numismatists and would-be collectors are invited to browse through the Museum's eight galleries and discover the incredible diversity of numismatic study. ANA members and children under 10 are admitted free; non-member adults, $1 (senior citizens, 50 cents); and non-member children, age

10 to 17, 50 cents. For information about exhibits and special services and programs, contact the ANA Museum.

Group Insurance Plans. Through the ANA, members can obtain comprehensive, low-cost insurance for themselves and their families, including all-risk collection insurance, group term life insurance, catastrophic major medical coverage and long-term care benefits. Contact the Membership Department for further information.

Credit Cards. By special arrangement with MBNA AmericaSM, the ANA offers qualifying members Silver or Gold MasterCard credit accounts. The Gold Card is issued free of its $40 annual fee the first year; the Silver Card is issued free of its $20 annual fee the first year. Annual percentage rate is 17.9 percent. Benefits of the Gold Card include worldwide acceptance at more than 7 million locations; a line of credit up to $15,000; one-hour processing of requests for increases in credit line; 24-hour customer service; and much more. Applications can be obtained by contacting the Membership Department or by calling MBNA America, 1-800-847-7378 (give ANA code "BPTC").

Reward Program. Rewards of up to $5,000 each are paid by the ANA to those furnishing information leading to the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for robberies, thefts or deaths in connection with crimes committed against ANA members. More information about this program can be obtained from the Public Relations Department.

Confidentiality. Unlike many organizations, the ANA does not release its membership list to other institutions or companies. However, because some members enjoy receiving additional mailings from different firms, the ANA offers a Preference Service, whereby the names and addresses of individuals who so indicate on their ANA membership applications will be made available to carefully selected, quality companies whose products we feel may interest you. If you would like to participate in this program, contact the Membership Department.

Car Rental Discounts. ANA members can take advantage of money-saving discounts offered by National Car Rental and Alamo Rent A Car. For more information, contact the Membership Department.

Awards Program. The American Numismatic Association offers an extensive program of awards and member recognition. See "Awards and Recognitions" in this handbook.

Senior Citizen Discount. ANA members 65 years of age or older can receive $4 off the cost of annual membership dues. To take advantage of this offer, indicate "senior citizen" and your birthdate on renewals or new member applications, or contact the Membership Department.

Action Cards. Sent to ANA members twice each year, ANA Action Cards are handy packs of business-reply cards offering many free or discounted goods and services, from catalogs and reference books to private commemorative issues. To learn more about ANA Action Cards, contact the Advertising Sales Manager, Publications Department.

National Coin Week. Introduced by the ANA in 1925, National Coin Week (NCW) is observed each year during the third full week of April. NCW activities stress the educational value of the numismatic hobby. For information about special National Coin Week programs and materials, contact the Educational Services Department.

From hobby supplies to numismatic novelties, you will find what you need in the Museum Store at ANA headquarters in Colorado Springs or through the ANA MoneyMarket catalog.

Representative Program

THE AMERICAN NUMISMATIC Association's Representative Program is a support group composed of ANA members who help ensure continued communication between Association headquarters and member clubs and individuals. These volunteer representatives stand ready to help collectors and organizations obtain audio-visual programs from the ANA's Resource Center; arrange for guest speakers at club functions; offer guidance in conducting club shows or establishing new coin clubs; and solicit and forward members' comments and suggestions to ANA headquarters.

Fourteen Regional Coordinators appointed by the ANA oversee 13 regions in the United States, as well as a "worldwide" region. The Regional Coordinators, in turn, select District Delegates, who interact with clubs and members on a local level. Each member club appoints an official ANA Club Representative, who serves as a liaison between the club and the ANA.

The Regional Coordinators listed below can put you in touch with District Delegates for whom no address is given. Questions about the Representative Program can be fielded by the Regional Coordinator for your district or the ANA Membership Department, telephone 719/632-2646, Fax 719/634-4085.

Littleton's 100,000 collector customers want your coins!

3 million coins from us!*

Littleton's over 100,000 customers from all 50 states have a broad range of collecting interests — from Lincolns, Buffalo Nickels and Walkers to Barber, Seated and early Bust coinage. To meet the interests and budgets of so many collectors, our inventory includes coins costing less than a dollar to important rarities worth several thousand dollars (we offer the widest selection of U.S. coins in the widest range of grades available anywhere).

Each year we spend millions of dollars for U.S. coins . . .

So if you have coins to sell in grades from AG-3 to MS-65, whether single issues or entire estates, perhaps you should consider the buying power of Littleton's 100,000 collector customers. Our needs are extensive and our buy prices are highly competitive.

- Entire collections purchased.
- Straightforward appraisals & offers.
- Fast confirmation and settlement.
- Finders fees and joint arrangements.
- Over 46 years of service & experience.

WHO AM I?

Professional Numismatic Dealer

WHAT HAVE I DONE?

I have handled, developed and sold many of the finest rare coin collections (Colonials through Modern Issues) in the country, including:

- Rare Colonial issues including several 1792 issues
- Assemblage of specialized collections of all early U.S. coins by die variety
- Simultaneous ownership and subsequent sale of two high quality 1838-O 50¢
- Assisted in the completion of the finest collection of double eagles ever assembled, including the 1927-D
- Sale of the Wilkison Gold Pattern Collection in 1973 and later bought and sold individual pieces, including the unique 1907 Indian Head $20, and the 1872 6-piece Amazonian Set and 1874 Bickford $10
- Participation as a bourse dealer at hundreds of local, regional and national coin shows and conventions
- Attendance at every major U.S. auction held since 1968, representing as many as 25 auction bidders at the same time
- Consultant to corporations, dealers and collectors in order to develop, build and expand collections as well as being instrumental in the promotion of the numismatic hobby

WHAT CAN I DO FOR YOU?

With total confidentiality I will tailor my services to fit your needs and:

- Assist in the formation and location of any U.S. coin or currency collection
- Counsel collectors, dealers and corporations on any aspect of the numismatic business or hobby
- Act as personal representative for any numismatic transaction at a maximum commission of 10%
- Appraise collections or individual pieces on an hourly basis
- Assist in the ORDERLY disposition of current holdings at current values

Outstanding references available from collectors, investors, dealers and institutions from all regions of the country. Inquiries invited from qualified and serious individuals, businesses and institutions by letter or telephone.

A Few Words about Grading

SINCE THE DAYS of old, people have collected coins. To build their collections, numismatists enjoy buying, selling and exchanging desirable pieces.

Grade, the condition or state of wear of a coin, is one of the determining factors of a coin's value. Until relatively recent times, grading was based on instinct. Drawing upon his knowledge and personal observations, one seller might develop his own system of grading, while another seller might employ a different system based on his own experiences. There was little standardization.

In the past few decades, coin values have increased sharply. For example, some coins worth $100 only 20 years ago, today sell for $2,000 or more. A very small difference in grade can mean a very large difference in price. The exact grade of a coin is more important now than ever before.

In 1958 Martin R. Brown and John W. Dunn published A Guide to the Grading of United States Coins, the first widely accepted grading reference, followed in 1970 by James F. Ruddy's Photograde. The continued increase in coin values brought about finer grading distinctions in the '70s, which were reflected in the first edition of Official ANA Grading Standards for United States Coins, published by the American Numismatic Association in 1977. The "mint state" or "uncirculated" category was divided into three grades: "Typical Uncirculated" (MS-60), References such as Official ANA Grading Standards for United States Coins are invaluable when grading coins.

"Choice Uncirculated" (MS-65) and "Perfect Uncirculated" (MS-70).

As values continued to increase in the strong market of 1979-80, dealers unofficially assigned such grades as MS-61, MS-62 and MS-63 to coins in an effort to establish guidelines in a market in which an MS-65 coin might sell for $8,000, while an MS-60 was worth only $1,000. The ANA Board of Governors reviewed the situation in 1980 and concluded that two intermediate grades were needed in the "uncirculated" category. MS-63 was added to represent a grade midway between MS-60 and MS-65; MS-67 was adopted for coins grading between MS-65 and MS-70. In 1986 the ANA Board expanded the grading system further by adding intermediate grades of AU-58, MS-61, MS-62, MS-64, MS-66, MS-68 and MS-69 and eliminating descriptive adjectives.

Interpretations of grades within the "uncirculated" category, MS-60 to MS-70, are apt to vary from person to person. Accordingly, experience in the marketplace is needed to grade coins properly. Do not rely on grading alone to determine the value of a coin, for the stated grade of a coin—even if determined by experts—is only part of the story.

Not everyone can become a market expert, nor can one trade with certainty if he or she depends solely on published grading guides and lists of market values (which generally can be found in weekly hobby publications). It is important to temper grading knowledge with experience, and to be aware of current grading interpretations in the market.

In recent years a number of third-party grading services have come into being. Although they have helped standardize grading throughout the industry, the opinions rendered by these services are just that: opinions. Grading is an art, not a science.

(Adapted from Q. David Bowers' introduction to Official ANA Grading Standards for United States Coins [1991, 4th edition], compiled, arranged and edited by Ken Bressett and Abe Kosoff.)

Investigate before You Invest

IF YOU INTEND to buy rare or billion coins for investment, your best protection is to learn about the coins you are being asked to buy. Investment success over the years is the result of prudently acquiring coins of selected quality, proven rarity, and established numismatic desirability. Careful buyers study coins for some time before purchasing even a single piece. Success can also be enhanced by researching dealers, as well as coins.

If you receive any solicitation about investing in coins, keep these points in mind:

- Use common sense when evaluating any investment claims and do not rush into buying.
- Make sure you know your dealer's reputation and reliability before sending money or authorizing a credit card transaction. If you cannot confirm the reliability of the dealer, consider investing with another firm. ANA member dealers must adhere to strict guidelines (see "Dealers' Code of Ethics" in this handbook). Look for the ANA "seal of approval" in dealers' shops and advertisements.
- Do not be taken in by false promises. Make sure the dealer will buy back your coins or that the grades are guaranteed.
- It is wise to get a second opinion from another source about grade and value as soon as you receive your coins. So, before you buy, find out what recourse you have if the second opinion differs. Will the full purchase price be refunded or will you be given a credit? If a dealer promises to buy back the coins at the same grade at which they were sold, does that mean at the price you paid or at some discounted amount?

- Be cautious about grading certificates, especially those furnished by coin dealers. Have the grades of any coins you buy checked by an independent source. Find out if the certification service is indeed independent of the dealer, and what grading standards it uses.
- Weekly periodicals list prices for coins that have been certified by various services. Check the prices for those coins you are considering.
- Comparison shop. You need to be concerned not only with grades, but with prices as well.
- Take possession of any coins you purchase to ensure they exist and are properly stored.
- As with any consumer purchase, be wary about giving your credit card number to strangers, especially over the telephone.

If you have a problem with a coin dealer and the dealer has not resolved the problem to your satisfaction, there are a number of places you can contact for help. Consumer protection agencies, including the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), are interested in obtaining your complaint information to build cases against fraudulent dealers. Although most government offices are not able to resolve individual disputes, they can usually give you sound advice about how to proceed.

Some dealers resolve disputes through binding arbitration by an independent third party, usually through one of their professional organizations. The American Numismatic Association offers mediation services for members with complaints against ANA dealers (see "Complaints and Mediation" in this handbook).

The following organizations and government agencies can be contacted regarding complaints against numismatic dealers:

If you have a complaint about an ANA member, write to American Numismatic Association, Mediation Services Department, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279.

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) is interested in the business practices of companies in its area. Contact the BBB in the city where the coin dealer is located.

The State Consumer Protection Agency or Attorney General's Office may be interested in your complaint information. Contact your State Consumer Protection Agency or the Attorney General's Office in the state where the coin dealer is located.

The U.S. Postal Inspector should be contacted if you have a complaint about coins you ordered, received or paid for by mail. Postal Inspectors are listed under "Postal Service" in the U.S. Government section of your local phone book.

The Federal Trade Commission is interested in receiving your complaint information. Write to "Rare Coins," Federal Trade Commission, 6th & Pennsylvania, N.W., Washington, DC 20580.

To receive an informative pamphlet, "Consumer Alert: Investing in Rare Coins," co-produced by the ANA and the FTC, contact the ANA Membership Department.

Complaints and Mediation

ANA MEMBERS AND dealers must adhere to a strict code of ethics (see "Members' Code of Ethics" and "Dealers' Code of Ethics" in this handbook). Any member committing any unethical acts in his dealings with other members, committing a criminal offense, engaging in conduct unbecoming a member, or failing to respond to a complaint filed against him with the Association, is subject to expulsion from the ANA.

ANA members or dealers who violate the Association's codes of ethics should be reported to the ANA immediately. Submit complaints in writing to the ANA Mediation Coordinator, who will notify the member or dealer in question of the charges against him.

The Mediation Coordinator works with the complainant and the member or dealer to arrive at a mutually acceptable solution. Most complaints are resolved in this manner. However, if such efforts fail, the complaint is referred to the Mediation Committee, which, in turn, makes recommendations to the Board of Governors. The Board's decisions are final; failure to comply can result in expulsion from the ANA. The name, city and state of the member or dealer in question, along with the grounds for disciplinary action, are published in The Numismatist.

Mediation services are free for members. For additional information, call the Mediation Services Department.

Taking Care of Your Collection

PROBABLY MORE COINS have been ruined over the years by improper handling than by any other cause. Needless to say, there is a right and a wrong way to hold a coin.

Coins should always be held between the thumb and index finger, with those two fingers touching only the edge of the coin. Never touch the obverse or reverse surfaces. Your hands contain a certain amount of oil, leaving behind fingerprints that can ruin a coin in a relatively short time.

Always make sure your hands are completely dry and clean. In some instances, particularly if you have exceptionally moist hands or if you are examining a proof coin, cotton gloves should be worn for extra safety. These can be purchased from your local drug-store for about $1 a pair.

Talk about your coins, but don't talk over them. Tiny droplets of saliva often are expelled when you speak and later may show up on a coin as spots that are difficult, if not impossible, to remove. Don't forget to turn your head when you sneeze or cough, and wait a few seconds before going back to examine the coin.

Finally, it's very important to hold the coin you're examining over a soft surface (a folded towel will do in a pinch) so that if you drop it, the coin will be somewhat protected. Never slide a coin across a hard surface.

Housing Your Coins

Now that you've invested some money in your collection, you'll want to preserve it as best you can. A good, short-term way to house coins is in mylar "flips." Be sure the flips contain no plasticizers or softening agents, however. The most common softening agent is polyvinyl chloride (PVC), which, when exposed to heat and/or humidity, can leave a green, sticky deposit on coins. The PVC can eat into the coin's surface and cause irreparable harm, often making valuable coins virtually worthless.

Mylar flips, though chemically safe, are stiff and very brittle, and care should be taken when inserting or removing coins. Scratches can be prevented by placing the coin in a polyethylene bag and then inserting it in the mylar flip.

Mylar also is used in 2 x 2-inch cardboard holders, which usually are closed with staples. Always flatten down the pointed ends of the staples so as not to scratch coins in adjacent holders. Be sure to take out the staples (usually two will suffice) before attempting to remove coins from these holders. Many coins have been permanently ruined by scratches from staples.

When a high degree of protection is not required, coins can be stored safely in 2 x 2-inch paper envelopes. Plastic tubes are excellent for storing rolls of coins.

Encapsulated products offered by many third-party grading services protect coins from improper handling.

A popular holder on the market is the Kointain™, a two-piece mylar capsule that fits tightly around the coin and allows you to handle it without actually touching the coin's surfaces. The Air-Tite™ holder is similar to the Kointain but features a black, neoprene ring that holds the coin firmly in place.

Hard plastic holders are excellent for long-term storage of high-grade collections or even single coins. These holders should be inspected regularly, however, to ensure that they have not deteriorated in any way.

The encapsulated products offered by many grading services protect coins from improper handling. However, because they are sonically sealed, the holders sometimes trap unnoticed contamination in with the coin. (Most services will not encapsulate a coin that has obvious contamination.)

Various types of albums also are available for storing coins. Whitman coin boards were first introduced in the late 1930s, followed by the familiar blue Whitman folders. These albums offered little protection, as the obverse was exposed.

Later, albums with acetate "slides" covering the front and back of the coin openings were marketed. These, however, were harmful because the hard plastic strips often scratched the coins as they were slid into and out of the album.

Most of these supplies can be purchased from the ANA Museum Store or from your local coin dealer or hobby shop. For a free copy of the ANA Museum Store's "MoneyMarket" catalog, contact the ANA Enterprise Coordinator.

Security Precautions

How and where you secure your coins is just as important as the care you take in preserving them. Coins should be stored as far away from heat and humidity as possible. Both of these factors, particularly when combined, have a very negative effect on numismatic collectibles.

A bank safe-deposit box is probably one of the best places to keep your coins, provided it is dry and not subject to severe variances in temperature. Some products on the market claim to help control tarnish when placed in the storage receptacle along with the coins. Bags of silica gel can retard humidity, but they must be replaced regularly.

Storing your collection at home

If you choose to keep your collection at home, a small combination safe is a smart investment.

can be risky. If your collection is especially valuable, you should install a reliable home-security system. A good combination safe that withstands fire is a wise purchase. It's a good idea to conceal it in a closet or piece of furniture, so as not to draw attention to it.

If you don't have the added security of a safe, be sure to store your coins in a well-hidden place, out of sight of cleaning people, repairmen, exterminators, or anyone else who has access to your home. Lock your coins in a file or desk drawer. Never hide them in the attic, under a mattress or in dresser drawers.

Be sure to check your coins periodically to make certain they are not exposed to chemical hazards. Don't assume that everything is okay just because your coins were fine the last time you inspected them.

Finally, don't forget to use common sense. Do not provide your home address for buying, selling or trading coins—use a post office box. When attending a coin show or convention, be alert and as inconspicuous as possible. Casual attire will attract less attention than gaudy or expensive clothing and jewelry. Think twice before discussing or showing off your coins in public places.

Invest a few dollars a year to insure your collection. The American Numismatic Association, for example, sponsors an all-risk collection insurance plan, which covers losses from theft, burglary and natural catastrophes at low group rates. For information about this insurance program, contact the Membership Department, telephone 719/632-2646, Fax 719/634-4085.

This overview of coin care and security was adapted from articles appearing in The Numismatist: "The 'Do's' and 'Don'ts' of Coin Collecting," by Bill Fivaz (July 1989); "Burglarized!" by B. Michael Thorne (April 1988); and "Common-Sense Security" by William T. Radeker (October 1989).

- (1). PCI only charges $7.50 per coin (plus postage, etc.) to grade, authenticate, encapsulate and to process your order regardless of its value. Compare this to $26 or $22 or even $12!

- (2). More collectors, dealers, individuals and banks (over 4100 total) have submitted coins to PCI than any other grading service. We challenge any grading service to match our record beginning the day we opened on June 1, 1989 until now!
- (3). Our standard express "turn-around" time from the day we receive your coins to the day we ship them out is 6 working days. At all of the other services this will cost you a minimum of $23! Our price is $7.50.
- (4). Anyone may submit coins to PCI at the same low rates. The 2 other major grading services have formed exclusive dealer networks... thereby restricting who may get coins graded. Why do you think they charge so much? It's obviously money in the dealers pocket not yours! No longer do you have to go through an "in-crowd" to get consistently graded coins. It's your private business!

- (5). Every genuine dated coin you now submit (except plugged, holed, altered or undistinguishable) will be encapsulated in either the GREEN LABEL or RED LABEL slab. Collectors know that coins in slabs are generally worth more and now you can get in on the profits. PCI does reserve the right to refuse to encapsulate any coin for any reason it feels would be detrimental to the numismatic industry.
- (6). Any purchaser or submitter of a PCI coin who believes their coin(s) is misgraded, improperly attributed, or has questionable authenticity may resubmit the slab for a re-evaluation and/or reslabbing. The resubmitted process of evaluation and/or reselling will be paid for by PCI (excluding return postage and insurance which you pay).

6 DAY EXPRESS SERVICE SLAB SUBMITTAL FORM

Coins will be shipped on or before the 6th working day after we receive them and will be sent U.S. Registered Mail.

Club Activities

A meeting of the Fly-In (Flying Eagle-Indian Head Cent) Club held at the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida, featured a program titled "Grading Bronze Indian Cents 1864-1909." Moderated by Rick Snow, the presentation helped define the minimum and maximum limits of certain grades . . . During the annual meeting of the Dedicated Wooden Money Collectors at the ANA anniversary convention, literary and membership awards were presented to Dan Scheid and Harold Butner, and outstanding service awards were given to Albert Bonesis and the family of Glen Littrell . . .

Ekrem Spahich, editor of The Trumpeter, journal of the Croatian Philatelic-Numismatic Society, believes that the disintegration of communist Yugoslavia and the escalating war in Bosnia and Herzegovina has created a renewed interest in the region's collectibles. The Society has prepared an offering of stamps, coins and currency from past and present areas of the former Yugoslavia. To obtain a price list, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to The Trumpeter, 1512 Lancelot, Borger, TX 79007-6341 . . .

The obverse of the assemblage medal for the Token and Medal Society's (TAMS) 1992 meeting, held during the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, depicts the Orange County Convention/Civic Center with three balloons hovering above. The TAMS logo is featured on the medal's reverse. The medals were issued in bronze and 1-ounce, .999 fine silver. The bronze specimen is priced at $3.50, postpaid, and the silver at $16.50, postpaid. A set of two medals (bronze and silver) can be ordered for $17.50, postpaid. For information and orders, write to Al Baber, 611 Oakwood Way, El Cajon, CA 92021 . . .

The Los Angeles Coin Club celebrated its 775th consecutive meeting this year. Originally known as the California Coin Club and founded on January 28, 1928, it is the oldest coin club in Southern California. The evening's highlight was the presence of 14 past presidents, spanning the years 1959-92 . . . California's Gateway Coin Club recently visited the San Francisco Mint. Although the Mint is usually closed to the public, club Treasurer Ron Lund took advantage of special opening dates in conjunction with the celebration of the U.S. Mint's 200th anniversary to organize a tour. Local newspaper announcements generated enough public interest to warrant chartering two buses. The club offered a special membership package to tour participants and recruited 16 new members . . .

The third annual "Northern Numismatic Weekend," sponsored by the Northwest Detroit Coin Club (NWDC), combined a coin show in Gaylord, Michigan (the first ever held there), with a dinner meeting and 70-lot auction. Retired coin club members who had moved to the Gaylord area participated, as did ANA Governor and NWDC member Florence Schook . . . Central Florida Coin Club members were well represented as exhibitors at the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando. Franc Connor and Bob Mitchell received first-place exhibit honors for "Grand Army of the Republic" and "Examples of Love Tokens and Engraved Coins," respectively . . .

A small cache of commemorative wooden nickels has been discovered by the West Chester Coin Club. The pieces feature the historic McCready covered bridge that once spanned Black Run Creek in West Nottingham Township, Chester County, Pennsylvania. The scene is the work of Joyce Ann Aspen, a recognized local artist, and was used to commemorate WCCC's 15th coin show on April 21-23, 1979. A set of four wooden nickels is available for $1 with a self-addressed, stamped, business-size envelope from WCCC, P.O. Box 818, West Chester, PA 19380 . . .

Bright Idea

In May of this year, the Boston Numismatic Society invited two foreign students from Harvard University to attend a club meeting. Before their visit, club members were asked to submit coins from the students' countries to be photographed for a slide presentation. The students then identified, translated and discussed the coins at the meeting.

ANA Past President Stephen Taylor spoke to Pennsylvania's Roxborough Coin Club at its October 7 meeting. He reminisced about his 16 years of ANA membership and offered insights into the organization's structure and operation. His talk included a slide show about the ANA's Summer Conference at ANA headquarters . . . The beautiful Pennsylvania Dutch area was the site of the Middle Atlantic Numismatic Association's 40th coin convention. Held in Myerstown, October 16-18, the show offered exhibits, specialty group meetings, a young numismatist program conducted by Larry Gentile Sr., a 50-table bourse and an educational program.

Cleaning Is Not Always Easy to Spot

THIS MONTH I will answer more questions about a topic that regularly causes a good bit of consternation in our hobby—cleaning. The subject is complicated by the fact that many cleaning methods considered harmful today were acceptable and even encouraged in the past, so the present generation of collectors has to deal with a large number of coins that were cleaned years, and sometimes decades, ago.

As an authenticator for ANACS, a third-party grading service operated by Amos Press, I occasionally field telephone calls from unhappy people whose coins were returned ungraded because they had been “cleaned.”

Some say something like, “My grandfather gave me the coin 40 years ago, and I certainly never cleaned it!” It is difficult to explain that someone may have cleaned the coin long before grandpa owned it. (It is also possible that grandpa himself cleaned the coin, something I usually refrain from mentioning.)

Whether a coin was cleaned 10 decades ago or 10 minutes ago, it still presents a problem. Readers have submitted some excellent questions about cleaning. I hope my answers to the set of questions here will prove useful.

Q. Hairlines can be inflicted on a coin's surface through normal circulation. How are these different from those on a cleaned coin? If you suspect that a coin has been cleaned, where would be the first places to look for evidence of this? I have read that all 1795 silver dollars probably have been cleaned by now. Is this reasonable to expect on certain dates? What is your experience with ANACS, Professional Coin Grading Service (PCGS) and Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC) in slabbing and grading early silver coins with hairlines, i.e., how lenient are they? I really do not want to spend good money for even

This 1795 Flowing Hair dollar would be considered acceptable by most, even though it has been lightly cleaned.

—K.M., Texas

A. Generally speaking, hairlines caused by circulation are fewer than those created by an intentional, abrasive cleaning. Circulation is a random event in which a coin acquires a hairline here, a nick there and so on, thus no single defect appears with great frequency. Abrasive cleaning, or even rubbing with a cloth after a “dip” in a mild acid solution, will cause a disproportionately large number of hairlines, many of which are oriented in the same direction.

Abrasive cleaning tends to show first on the higher points of a coin's design, because they are more exposed. On some portrait coins, such as Morgan or Bust dollars, Miss Liberty's cheek is a likely place. Look for a heavy concentration of parallel hairlines.

It is true that practically all 1795 silver dollars have been cleaned at one time or another, some more harshly than others. Because so many have been cleaned, a certain degree of cleaning is considered “acceptable.” Granted, this acceptability level varies from one collector or dealer to another

Although magnification reveals a few hairline scratches on this 1798 dollar, the result of light cleaning many, many years ago, the coin represents a very acceptable, mostly original specimen.

and is difficult to describe in words, but a good, general description might be "light or scattered hairlines with substantially original surfaces."

Other oxidation-prone silver coins from the late 18th and early 19th centuries, such as other Bust coinage and Seated Liberty coins, fall into the category of the 1795 dollars, with some cleaning being the rule rather than the exception.

The amount of "acceptable" cleaning decreases as the coins become more recent. For example, you would not expect 1876 half dollars to have been as harshly or frequently cleaned as 1795 dollars. The only way to gain a good feeling for this is to examine a large number of coins.

Over the years, many cleaned coins begin to "re-tone" naturally. Because this toning tends to lessen the visual impact of hairlines and impaired luster, it often increases the coins' eye appeal and value.

ANACS, PCGS and NGC will assign a grade to many early coins, especially circulated specimens, that exhibit light hairlines. As mentioned, some coins are almost expected to have them. Coins with moderate hairlining often are "net graded," that is, graded slightly lower to compensate for the hairlines' effect on value. For instance, a Bust half dollar with moderate hairlining that would otherwise grade Very Fine-20 may be "net graded" Fine-15. Coins with too many hairlines are not graded.

Whatever you do, don't clean or "dip" an early silver coin just because so many have already been cleaned. A few coins may benefit from such treatment, but countless others can be harmed. Early material that is completely original is very difficult to find and often is worth a premium.

AUCTION INSIGHTS
BY BOB MERRILL

More Buried Treasure

In last month's column, we saw how a group of investors decided to multiply their profits by entering the illegal drug trade and plowing much of their ill-gotten rewards into rare U.S. coins.

Despite their Machiavellian means of acquiring coins, the drug smugglers managed to amass a significant number of rarities. While they concentrated on U.S. gold in general, their specialty was eagles and double eagles.

When cataloging the coins confiscated by the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA), we divided the coins between our October Long Beach and December Dallas sales of 1988. In the October sale alone were 13 different eagles dated between 1795 and 1804. And for the December auction, there were no less than 28 such pieces. These 41 coins alone realized in excess of $400,000. The best part is, all of them sold, as neither the smugglers nor the DEA placed any protective bids on them.

The single rarest eagle was a 1795 "nine leaves" variety, which was Lot 1404 in our October sale. This was an AU-50 coin with some prooflike surfaces and light adjustment marks. Interestingly enough, it was the first eagle to be offered and seemed to set the pace by bringing $42,900. Granted, the market in 1988 was different than today, but the price is especially impressive when one realizes that neither the Garrett nor Eliasberg Sales contained a single one of these coins.

We placed about two-thirds of the total value of the DEA consignment in our December auction. It was our intention that the October sale would whet the appetites of prospective bidders. Word would spread, and we would have a massive attendance for the December auction. The result was exactly as anticipated.

The early $10s were not the only highlights of the collection. There also was a 1933 $10 Indian, an 1856-O double eagle and three Flowing Hair Stellas. At least these guys had good taste in coins.

Not everything was buried in Nebraska, as mentioned last month. Another cache was found on the island of Maui in Hawaii, and a third was uncovered on a mountain in Colorado, where one of the conspirators, apparently tired of buying and burying Tupperware™ containers, just decided to leave his briefcase in a rocky crevasse. Obviously, this location was easier to find than the other two, and, since the case still carried its United Airlines baggage claim check, there was no difficulty determining its owner.

Highlighting the large selection of eagles was a 1933 mint-state Indian, with beautiful, original mint bloom.

Next to our ANA auctions, these two sales were as exciting as any we have ever conducted. The tale was just too great. The national press picked up on the story, and the auction was even featured in TIME magazine. I wish I could say more about the drug smugglers, but our agreement with the DEA limits what can be written.

I should also mention that our December sale was inundated with government officials from the DEA, the U.S. Marshall's Service, the National Assets Seizure and Forfeiture Program, the Orange County (California) Sheriff's Department and the San Diego Sheriff's Department, among others. It almost seemed that we had every major Republican official of 1988 in attendance, except for Willie Horton, who was probably too tired from the presidential campaign to attend, and Ronald Reagan, who likely forgot.

Bob Merrill has served as auction director for Heritage Numismatic Auctions in Dallas, Texas, since 1976. Previously he taught history at a Dallas junior college. Heritage, selected as the official auctioneer for ANA anniversary conventions through 1995, has been awarded more ANA auctions since 1980 than all other firms combined.

The December sale included three Flowing Hair Stellas grading between AU-50 and MS-66.

began to climb steadily, and, as the bullion value of the coins soared to twice their face value, they were either melted down or hoarded. By 1921 only 125,000 balboas' worth of Panama silver coins remained in the vaults of the Banco Nacional.

Fortunately, there was still an unrestricted flow of U.S. paper currency and gold and silver coins between the Republic of Panama and the Canal Zone. (This period—when Panama's own coinage was in short supply and U.S. currency circulated extensively—probably did much to establish the use of U.S. coins and paper money in the Republic of Panama for many years thereafter.)

However, coin-operated devices, such as public pay telephones, had to be considered. Tokens were required, at least on an interim basis, to facilitate continued use of the telephones, which operated on the original, large silver coins.

Five different telephone tokens are known for Panama, including two varieties of one denomination issued by the Panama Telephone Company ("CIA. PAN. DE TEL.," as noted on the obverse of the tokens). The company issued 10-, 20- and 50-cent "silver" tokens in what looks very much like German silver, an alloy of copper, nickel and zinc. Two varieties of the 10 cents are recognized, one with small lettering (2.2mm) on the obverse, the other with larger lettering (2.7mm). These denominations likely were used as test tokens by telephone servicemen called out to troubleshoot public pay phones.

The Panama Power & Light Company ("CIA. PAN. DE F. y L.") issued a similar 10-cent token with distinctly different lettering in what appears to be a copper-nickel alloy. No other denominations or varieties are known. These probably were used by service crews when placing calls to headquarters to report on conditions and receive further instructions. (Remember, they didn't have radios in their vehicles at that time!)

These tokens must have been issued when the country's coin shortage became acute and before pay telephones accepted U.S. coins or Panama's new, smaller silver coins that were struck in 1930 in the same sizes as U.S. denominations. This would place the tokens' period of use in the early 1920s.

What began as a mystery is now clear and simple. It just goes to show that an understanding of a country's coinage can reveal valuable information about its tokens. •

BY ROBERT W. HOGE

Two Imperial Denarii from the Pavian Mint

Our featured coins this month are typical examples of one of the most important coinages of the European continent—silver denarii of the German Holy Roman Emperors, from the northern Italian mint of Pavia in Lombardy. Included in the bequest of the late Howard E. Bailey, they demonstrate the interest of even relatively common and, in some respects, unappealing pieces in the development of the cabinet.

The Museum's large collection of numismatic items still has vast numbers of gaps in terms of its ability to represent the role of numismatics in civilization. Even though the imperial Pavian mint issued great quantities of its denarius papiensis from the 10th to the 12th century, the Bailey specimens of these rather crude little pieces (once a principal medium of exchange throughout Italy) were the first such in the Museum's collection.

The Roman tradition of state control over minting was perpetuated in Italy during the Middle Ages, unlike the situation in Germany and France, where many independent feudal rulers struck coinage in their own names. The four imperial mints of Pavia, Verona, Milan and Lucca provided the monetary needs of nearly the entire peninsula for several years. Our two papienses are attributed to the Emperors Otto I of Saxony (962-73) and Henry III of Franconia (1046-56). These rulers maintained the policies of Charlemagne, founder of the Holy Roman Empire, in attempting to provide a broadly accepted, sound currency for Christendom. Known to history as Otto "the Great" and Henry "the Black," they were among the most significant of the German emperors.

Otto consolidated the German "Reich," defeated revolts, drove back invasions by the Magyars and Slavs, dominated Italy, and succeeded in bringing prosperity and a flowering of culture to his dominions. Dabbling further in world politics, he arranged the marriage of his son, the future Otto II, with the Byzantine princess Theophano in 972.

Henry continued the policy of active involvement in Italy, with many future consequences. He married, in succession, the daughters of King Canute of Denmark and England, and of Duke William V of Aquitaine—two of the greatest lords of his time. As emperor, he is probably best known for his reform of the papacy, which improved its standing, and his authority to appoint new popes, themselves ecclesiastical reformers.

The Ottonian denarius reads O/TT/O within a circle of dots, surrounded by the title +IMPERATOR ("emperor") on the obverse, and +AVGVSTVS around PA/PA/I on the reverse. The coin of Henry reads +AVGVSTVS[CE] on the obverse, around a circle of dots surrounding his "name" (the letters H/DIC/N in the form of a cross), in the angles of which are clusters of tiny dots. The reverse legend +INPERATOR encircles the mint signature PA/PIA/CI (for Papia civitas, "city of Pavia"). Both coins exhibit the characteristically clumsy and blundered lettering typical of their issues, with such features as the D-like P's in the mint name Papia, the D substituting for R in H[e]nric, the indeterminate M/N in imperator, the horizontal S's in augustus, the unbarred

Two coins that served as a principal medium of exchange in their day are represented by the ANA Museum's denarius of Otto I (top) and a denarius of Henry III. The Ottonian piece weighs 1.155g, has a diameter of 17.1mm and is in very good condition. The denarius of Henry, in about fine condition, weighs 1.376g and has a diameter of 16.4mm (ANA Museum Accession Nos. 1992.16.47 and 1992.16.48, respectively).

A's, and the labored, awkward spacing of the inscriptions in general.

In the great reference work on medieval Italian coinages, the Corpus Nummorum Italicorum (Vol. 4, Rome, 1913)—prepared to order for King Victor Emanuel III and based on his personal collection—under Pavian coinages of Otto I, No. 4 corresponds most closely with the ANA's coin, while among the pieces attributed to Henry III, No. 1 approximates the present example. It should be noted that many coins from Pavia of the emperors Otto I to III and Henry III to V cannot at present be absolutely assigned to a given ruler. •

EMERGING GIANTS

"Key" coins are once again becoming the focus of Numismatics! The population reports issued by PCGS and NGC have made informed individuals acutely aware of how desirable and undervalued many truly rare and low population coins are when compared to most highly touted "generic" coins. When working with coins of this nature, I believe that it is essential to enlist the help of a specialist. In this way, you can benefit from experience while avoiding the pitfalls.

I have been dealing exclusively in rare date gold coins for over a dozen years. My reputation and knowledge in this field is unsurpassed. I would be pleased to work with you to build your "World Class" collection or investment portfolio.

Please call me today, so we can discuss your needs.

*ANA Benefits & Services Handbook

Painting the Hobby "Read"

MORE NUMISMATIC LITERATURE has been published during the last 20 years than in the previous 80. Don't take my word for it—expert Myron Xenos recently said it. Or, was it his expert partner, Ken Lowe? Xenos and Lowe lovingly catalog interesting numismatic literature sales for The Money Tree in Rocky River, Ohio.

The point is, while gloom-and-doom fortunetellers are warning that coin collecting is a dying hobby, there is plenty of life in numismatic publishing. Contrary to rumors that the prolific Q. David Bowers and Eric P. Newman have cornered the market on every available book and research topic—and award—the hobby is filled with wonderful, new reading matter.

I don't usually do book reviews (or windows), but here are a few thoughts about recent numismatic publications:

Tom Becker, whose witty booklet Confessions of a Coin Dealer was mentioned earlier (April 1992, p. 576), also has authored eight, thought-provoking essays. In the eight-page pamphlet "The Truth about Rare Coin Dealers," he observes, "Some dealers can attribute large cents by Sheldon number without looking at a copy of Penny Whimsy. Some other dealers might think Penny Whimsy is the lead singer in an all-girl rock band!"

Other essays include "The Truth about Third-Party Grading" and "The Truth about Rare Coin Auctions." (You can find out more about Becker's publications by writing to Becker and Keuhnert, P.O. Box 735, Laconia, NH 03247.)

At last count, Dave Bowers had written more than three dozen books, but that count was taken at 10 o'clock this morning, so the actual figure may be much higher by now. Bowers won awards this year from the Professional Numismatists Guild (PNG) and the Numismatic Literary Guild (NLG) for his Commemorative Coins of the United States: A Complete Encyclopedia (Bowers and Merena Publications, Box 1224, Wolfeboro, NH 03894).

This superb reference work has 768 pages. Even with speed reading, the commemorative coin market will have gone through at least two of its periodic up and down cycles by the time you've finished the easy-reading text and studied the more than 300 photographs. Bowers proves once again that the "Q" stands for both "Quantity" and "Quality."

The NLG also honored John W. Highfill for his impressive Complete U.S. Silver Dollar Encyclopedia (Highfill Press, P.O. Box 365, Broken Arrow, OK 74013), another hefty reference book filled with observations from many of the hobby's silver dollar specialists.

Gentleman and scholar John D. Wright, who purchased his first large cent in 1954, put three decades of research on Early American coppers into The Cent Book (Litho Technical Services, 1600 West 92nd Street, Bloomington, MN 55431). In addition to the 400-page, informative text about what Wright calls "fascinating artifacts," this book is filled with photographs of exceptional detail and clarity. This will now be the authoritative reference on 1816-39, middle-date large cents.

Remember, these are only a few of the recent numismatic publishing achievements. To those pessimists who warn that the hobby is dying, I reply, "Better read than dead!"

Another Saturday night, and Jerry is like an old Buffalo nickel—dateless.

DON'T WASTE MONEY . . . Why continue to pay expensive rental fees on safe deposit boxes? Now may be the time to liquidate your collection and put an end to those unwanted fees and put the money realized from the sale of your collection to better use.

WHO SHOULD SELL YOUR COINS . . . Don't leave the responsibility of selling your collection to someone who is not equipped to handle the task. You, the collector are best able to sell your holdings in an orderly and intelligent manner.

HOW IT IS DONE . . . There are many ways to sell your collection. Anthony's can tailor the sale to your satisfaction. We would appreciate the opportunity to discuss the sale of your holdings.

FROM COLLECTOR TO INVESTOR

The most trusted grading service available

For many of today's numismatists coin collecting started at a young age with the discovery of a few 'old' nickles or pennies.

As we grew older the excitement of finding, trading and collecting coins stayed with us.

Eventually, the hobby became a business and the business grew into an industry.

At NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA (NGC), we are committed to advancing numismatics—both as a hobby and as a business.

THE CREDIBLE SOURCE FOR SUPERIOR, CONSISTENT COIN GRADING SERVICES.

Now dealers, collectors, and investors can be confident that they will receive consistent coin grading time after time.

The NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA, with over 500 charter and associate members, provides the industry with an independent, credible, and superior coin grading service.

Agenda: Find a Solution!

IT IS A problem unlikely to go away, but rather to grow in intensity if it is not soon resolved. The problem has been with us for some time, but came to a head recently when a letter, under the signature of Convention Director Ruthann Brettell, was sent to 59 bourse dealers who chose to close their tables and leave before the end of the 101st Anniversary Convention at Orlando advising that a penalty was being assessed. Not all left without due cause, but the departures did leave a huge void on the convention floor.

It is the ANA Board of Governors' responsibility to find an equitable solution to a problem pitting collector interest against that of bourse dealers. We must be fair to the dealers who venture to convention sites at great expense, but equally so to collectors who travel at like expense only to find a vacated bourse. Letters to the editor columns and "op-ed" pages in the numismatic press show that many dealers do not take lightly to dictates that regulate their rights of participation. "Nobody is going to tell us what we can do," appears to be a rallying cry.

Let us carefully, without emotional hysteria, look at both sides of the issue we are now addressing. Unfortunately, tempers flare and emotion brushes reason aside to the detriment of the hobby.

Disappointment is expressed by the hundreds who, by virtue of work or constraints of time and travel, can attend only the last days of the convention. There is resentment by dealers who have sacrificed both time and money to live by the rules, then watch their counterparts pack up and leave. Those who choose to leave feel their freedom is being encroached upon.

Few professional trade shows allow "exhibitors," as dealers are referred to in the parlance of the convention industry, to leave early. But, these shows charge the public an admission fee. The shows can be likened to a performance with advance billings for "stars" who will be on hand. Dealers are our "stars." You can also look at an ANA convention as a gigantic numismatic shopping mall. Mall stores cannot arbitrarily set their own times. Outlets contractually agree to maintain like hours for the convenience of the shopping trade. ANA bourse dealers also contract to maintain the specific times of the bourse.

That the ANA has the right to set hours and expect compliance has been tested in federal court. In New York in 1976 a few dealers chose to ignore bourse regulations and closed their tables without regard to the rules they had agreed to abide by.

The following year posed a problem of sorts for the Board. The number of dealers applying for bourse tables exceeded the space available. All applications were judged on the same standards. Those who chose to follow the rules were given priority over those who did not. The latter were placed on an alternate list should space become available.

Most accepted the Board's ruling, save for a few whose bounds of disagreement breached those of comprehension and human dignity. I speak for myself only, not the ANA Board of Governors. These dealers sought redress through the court, as is their constitutional right. They sued for $20.5 million.

I have had to fight with myself over the years not to let any personal prejudice over their actions influence any decision made by me as ANA's executive director. The suit, brought by a few dealers, came to a head in July 1977, several weeks before the ANA convention in Atlanta. Coincidentally, at the same time my wife was hospitalized, marking her final days of an unsuccessful fight with cancer. I had remained in telephonic communications with representatives of the firms concerned. When the end became imminent, I excused myself to be at her bedside, but neither their calls nor demands ceased. They breached the telephone restraints to her room, telling hospital operators their business was both important and urgent.

A few days later, at her wake, these same people came to Colorado Springs. A meeting was arranged to convene at the Antlers Hotel following the closing hours of the funeral parlor. Their ultimatum was that on the following day, I was to meet with them in Atlanta to "show me where to place their bourse tables" or face a personal suit of $20.5 million for malfeasance of duty. Told that the funeral was set for the next day, their reply was that what they were doing was "important."

That confrontation, unbelievable as it may sound, was not without witnesses. Chester Krause, John Pittman, Adna Wilde, Grover Criswell and

Term Limits for ANA Board Members

"With the present process, many individuals wishing to serve . . . seldom have a chance to do so."

—Helen L. Carmody
ANA Regional Coordinator

"If you don't like someone in office, vote him or her out. Don't let incumbency be an asset . . ."

ANA Member

TERM LIMITATIONS HAVE been proposed since the Constitution was created over 200 years ago. Surveys report that 80 percent of our citizens favor them, and this year 14 states are voting on this issue. Why should not ANA's bylaws also more accurately mirror the desires of its members? We are at a very serious crossroad in our history. New ideas and perspectives are needed to remedy the problems facing the ANA in these changing times.

With the present process, many individuals wishing to serve on the ANA Board of Governors seldom have a chance to do so. Candidates having sound organizational skills and a sincere desire to represent the wishes of the membership most likely will never gain the name recognition of those who have been on the Board for many years.

Remember that only ANA headquarters is located in Colorado Springs. Our membership is drawn from all over the world. The Board need not be composed of "careerists." The ANA is not a vast mystery that has to be run by a small clerisy. We need only the best, most intelligent and most energetic hobbyists who are dedicated to furthering numismatics and, in so doing, improving the ANA. There are many waiting to be called.

Will we lose some wonderful workers who have made considerable contributions to the hobby over the years? Of course, but we will replace them with others whose untapped vigor and enthusiasm are so vital to every organization's development. Article VI, Section 10 of our bylaws states that "Any person elected as President cannot be a candidate for the office of President or Vice President, but may be a candidate for Governor in any subsequent election."

I recommend that in the future term limitations be imposed and that past presidents not be eligible to run for the Board. However, they should be invited to serve in an advisory capacity, so that their invaluable experience and counsel can benefit the Board and membership alike. •

TERM LIMITATION ALWAYS sounds reasonable and appears to be a simple, non-confrontational way of getting someone you don't like or disagree with out of elective office. Usually it's pursued by those who want to successfully seek the same elective office and who feel their only stumbling block is the long-standing incumbent.

I'm from the school that thinks the ANA already has term limitation. In fact, we've always had it. It's called exercising your right, obligation and opportunity to vote. It's free, painless and, most important to some, it's secret.

Sadly, only about one-third of our membership casts a ballot every two years in the ANA Board of Governors election. The rest are complacent and willing to let someone else take control. If you permit anyone to hold office without some sort of accountability, then you deserve poor leadership.

Many new officeholders start out in great form, and work to initiate and implement new ideas and programs. After a while, however, they run out of steam and allow someone else on the Board to take control. If you're pretty much guaranteed your seat for as long as you want it, and no one is really watching you, then why work? Why be creative?

If you don't like someone in office, vote him or her out. Don't let incumbency be an asset—make it an albatross. Get behind a candidate for office and support him or her. If you can't find a candidate to support, solicit nominations to get your own name on the ballot.

If we worry about changing the bylaws to limit terms of ANA Board members, then I'm certain other "objections" will arise when someone fails to be elected. We don't need to change anything but our apathy. Take action! Take control! Vote! •

Opinions expressed are those of the authors and do not necessarily represent the views of the ANA or the editorial staff.

Readers Respond to Dowd's Proposal

Mr. Dowd's suggestion of annually salting the coins in circulation with old Wheat cents, Buffalo nickels and silver Roosevelt dimes ("Heads or Tails: Revitalizing the Hobby," p. 1197, September 1992), is akin to applying a hasty band-aid to a terrible gunshot wound. It won't work.

I agree that interest in coin collecting has been waning for some time (I'd date the start of the decline in 1965). There are many reasons for this, and Mr. Dowd touches on an important one: the futility of a youngster finding any "neat" coins in circulation. But will the random youngster chancing upon a beat-up Buffalo nickel be magically instilled with the urge to go further? No way.

We'd have far more success if icons such as Michael Jackson, Madonna, Tom Cruise, Luke Perry or Michael Jordan were to announce that they have taken up coin collecting. This seemingly innocuous development would create incredible interest in our hobby, as thousands of youngsters would at least look into coins because now it is a "cool" thing to do.

Fantasizing aside, let's face some hard-to-swallow facts. Many of us became collectors during the 1950s. I did. That was a wonderful time in our nation's history. The 1950s and '60s gave us a unique set of circumstances that catapulted coin collecting to the top of hobby pursuits. The ensuing decline has been a source of continuous grief and frustration to many people as they strive to counter the downward trend. I assure you, throwing a bunch of Wheat cents and silver Roosevelt dimes into circulation is not the answer.

Maurice Rosen, ANA 69411

I agree with Mr. Dowd's proposal; however, a neophyte can confuse silver with clad coinage. When an "obsolete" coin is spent, it is kept by the first person who receives it, then dropped into a jar and forgotten. If the person takes the coin to a coin show for appraisal, he finds it is not worth much. These days, who can be bothered? Most people will wait until prices peak, scared away by talk of prices at 20-year lows. It seems a baseball card worth $3 generates more excitement than a $3 silver coin.

However, there is a glimmer of light. It comes from the endeavors of the Young Numismatists of America organization, the ceaseless education of YNs by Larry Gentile Sr. and other adult leaders, and ANA convention exhibits. When baseball cards eventually find themselves in the same greedy, high-priced, self-serving slump, the ANA will have learned to target the type of demographics that make a hobby healthy.

Who are the future numismatists, and how do we meet their needs? Right now in our schools, the future generation is learning. As members of the ANA, we are in a position to refuel and brighten the lamp of knowledge! But too few educators know about National Coin Week, and a majority of students are not familiar with the word

"numismatist" and do not know any coin collectors. As ANA members, we are in a position to "go back to school" by adopting one. Approach the principal of a local school about National Coin Week. The ANA is happy to help promote the hobby, and many coin dealers will donate world coins for such projects.

Until the U.S. government circulates a different quarter each month or creates a new design, it is up to us, the members of the ANA, to keep the lamp burning.

Mark Ohberg, ANA 145740

Mr. Dowd has a good idea that would probably boost our hobby, but I think he overestimates the generosity of coin collectors and dealers. He does admit that his proposal is "contrary to the nature of the collector," and I can give you proof that this is true.

Some time ago I answered an ad in a major coin publication. The ad was placed by an elementary school teacher who wanted to create an interest in coin collecting among his students by using foreign coins in his history and geography lessons. I sent them a few inexpensive coins and received a very nice "thank you" from the students and their teacher.

They informed me that I was the only person in the whole country who had responded to their ad! It cost me less than $1 for the coins and the postage.

When I heard that I was the only person who had sent any coins, I followed up with 100 coins from 100 various countries (another inexpensive deal).

The fact that only one coin collector (and no dealers) was willing to part with a few inexpensive coins says a lot about the nature of our hobby and the people involved in it.

Orlando Committee and Educational Programs Deserving of Recognition

I was saddened by the fact that The Numismatist totally ignored the Orlando educational presentations in the October 1992 issue ("Orlando Convention Distinguished by Strong Collector Activity," p. 1371). How can you give a wrap-up of the convention and ignore the Numismatic Theatre?

As I read through the issue, I saw a captioned photo of the parade of ducks at the Peabody Hotel. Are these ducks more worthy of coverage than the educational speakers?

Finally, couldn't The Numismatist have included a simple "thank you" to convention chairmen Roger and Ginger Bryan, the FUN board members and the volunteers from the Central Florida Coin Club? Without their efforts, there would not have been an ANA convention!

August 17, 1992

Dear FUN:

On behalf of the American Numismatic Association (ANA) Board of Governors, officers, staff and membership, I am pleased to extend our thanks to the Florida United Numismatists for all its help in the successful 1992 AmericANA Coin Show: A World's Fair of Money.

The ANA Anniversary Convention is always a wonderful experience for young and old, collectors and dealers, members and new members. It is an event that requires a tremendous amount of planning, coordination, and, most importantly, support—the key ingredient to the entire production.

The people of FUN gave the highest levels of support. Under the very capable leadership of Convention General Chairman Roger Bryan and his wife and Assistant General Chairman, Ginger, members of FUN worked long and hard to help produce the ANA World's Fair of Money.

The membership of FUN can take pride in the efforts of Bob Hendershott, honorary general chairman; James Best, pre-registration chairman; Randy Campbell, education chairman; Kenneth Embler, YN chairman; Cindy Grellman, exhibit chairman; James Marino, bourse/property chairman; Glenn Meyers, activities chairman; Tom Palmer, registration chairman; and Bud Tobin, banquet chairman.

I also would like to give our heartfelt thanks to the families, colleagues and friends of this wonderful convention committee. Together, everyone's efforts resulted in a great new beginning to ANA's second century.

Edward C. Rochette, President

Information Needed to Update Directory of Communion Tokens

Next year the Charlton Press and Nadin-Davis International will join together in publishing a second edition of Creswell's Comprehensive Directory of World Communion Tokens. The firms are interested in getting out a call to collectors and students of the series for corrections or additions to the first edition. Pricing information for the series or any part of it also would be of great assistance.

$200 Coin Captures the Thunder of Niagara Falls

One of the world's most impressive natural wonders, Niagara Falls, is depicted on the 1992 Canada $200 gold coin. The piece is the third annual release in a series of 22kt-gold $200 coins celebrating the spirit and promise of Canada's youth.

The reverse of the 1992 $200 portrays two young children playing near the falls. It was designed by Ontario artist John Mardon, who also created Canada's 1989 Mackenzie River commemorative silver dollar and 1990 gold $100 honoring the United Nations' International Year of Literacy.

The 22kt-gold Niagara Falls $200 coin sells for $335; mintage is limited to 25,000 pieces. It is available from coin dealers or directly from the Royal Canadian Mint, Box 457, Station "A," Ottawa, Ontario K1N 9H3, Canada, telephone toll free, 800/267-1871.

Order 1992 Proof Sets before Year Ends

Since the introduction of the coinage of Queen Beatrix in 1982, it has become a tradition at the Dutch Mint to close out each year with a proof set containing an example of each of the country's circulating coins—5, 10 and 25 cents and 1, 2½ and 5 guilders.

Coins in the 1992 Dutch proof set are double struck on polished planchets, individually encapsulated in inert plastic, and housed in a blue-and-red presentation booklet. The official ordering period ends on December 31, 1992; final mintage is estimated at 15,000 sets.

The 1992 Netherlands proof set can be ordered from the Dutch Mint's North American Office for $57.50, plus $2.75 shipping and handling. Send orders to Dutch Mint, P.O. Box 1057, Clifton, NJ 07014 or telephone toll free, 800/421-1866. Payment via VISA and MasterCard is accepted.

Don't Buy the Coin Until You Have Seen the VIDEO

Grading of Mint State U.S. Coins

If you can't personally attend one of the ANA's Grading seminars this informative new video is the best way to sharpen your grading skills. Narrated by J.P. Martin, who has taught more people the basics of grading than anyone in the history of numismatics, this professionally produced video focuses on silver dollars, Walking Liberty halves, coppers and gold. You will learn:

- History and evolution of grading
- Technical versus market grading
- Four factors of eye appeal
- The types of luster
- Whizzing, cleaning, thumbing and artificial frosting

The video even gives you the opportunity to grade coins pictured on the screen - with immediate feedback from the instructor.

#VI 005 $39.95 VHS Only

"The video is excellent. J.P. teaches with close-up views of actual coins, making the viewer feel as if they are in a private seminar receiving his personal instruction."

F.M. FAZZARI.

From Insight on Coinage.

"This script is the best discussion of commercial grading I have ever seen."

KEN BRESSETT.

Noted Numismatic Scholar.

"This video is a must if you don't know how to grade or want to reinforce your grading skills."

ANTHONY SWIATEK

Co-author "Silver & Gold Commemorative Coins"

"I was delighted to see that it addressed every single area which I feel is important, in fact crucial, to understanding today's grading standards. The difference between market grading (the real world) and technical grading (the more theoretical approach), were covered in depth and were especially well explained."

I very strongly endorse this presentation, and suggest that anyone can benefit from it . . . beginner or seasoned collector. It is concise, with excellent illustrations, and very user friendly. The $39.95 price is a bargain for this 88 minute seminar, as it could easily pay for itself through the purchase (or non-purchase) of one coin."

Call for Nominations of ANA Officers

The officers of the American Numismatic Association are elected every two years, and, as such, it is time once again to select individuals to lead the organization. The ANA is governed by a nine-member board, which includes a president, vice president and seven governors. The Association's federal charter, granted by the Congress of the United States, rests control of the ANA in the hands of this board.

The offices that will be vacated in 1993 because of expiring terms of the incumbents, and to which new officers must be elected, are the presidency, vice presidency and all seven governors' seats. Those elected to these offices will be installed at the 1993 Baltimore convention and will compose the Board of Governors for the ensuing two years.

Nominations should be submitted in writing to the executive director by any member entitled to vote no earlier than January 15, 1993, and no later than March 31, 1993. A nominee must be a member who is entitled to hold office under Article I, Section 2; Article IV, Section 1(a); and Article VI, Sections 1, 10, 11 and 12. In order to be a candidate for office, a member must receive at least five (5) nominations from member clubs in good standing and at least five (5) nominations from individual members in good standing. No member may nominate himself or nominate a number of candidates for any office in excess of the number to be elected therefor. It is suggested that the member include his or her ANA membership number to facilitate the recording of nominations.

The executive director will promptly write to each qualified nominee, notifying him or her of such nominations and requesting a written acceptance or refusal. No nominee may accept a nomination for more than one elective office. The president is not eligible for reelection to the office of president or vice president, but is eligible for election to a governorship. A nominee's acceptance must be received by the executive director on or before April 7, 1993.

The executive director will cause a

"Riviera of the Rockies" Offers Unique Convention Facilities

"The best part about its present is its past," said Spencer Penrose about The Broadmoor hotel, site of the ANA's upcoming Early Spring Convention in Colorado Springs, Colorado. Penrose was well-equipped to know—the resort grew from his dream of owning a hotel, and its construction was financed in large part by his Cripple Creek goldfield fortune.

Opened June 1, 1918, the pink stucco, Italian Renaissance-style structure was designed by the New York architectural firm of Warren and Wetmore (also responsible for New York's Grand Central Station and Biltmore, Ritz-Carlton, Vanderbilt and Belmont Hotels). The interior, decorated by European artisans, was filled with unusual objects the Penroses had acquired in their travels to exotic locales. Golf courses, swimming pools, a private lake, tennis courts, polo grounds, theatre, restaurants and a tavern completed the amenities. The new resort soon acquired a reputation as the "Riviera of the Rockies."

The elegance and ambience of The Broadmoor have earned it the title "Riviera of the Rockies."

Although The Broadmoor has been enhanced, expanded, refurbished and modernized, it has never lost its old-world charm. A Colorado landmark and one of the few resort and meeting facilities in the nation to receive Mobil's "five star" rating and AAA's "five diamond" rating, the hotel offers a blend of modern meeting facilities and gracious accommodations against the splendor of Colorado's Rocky Mountains.

Recreational opportunities abound at The Broadmoor, including three 18-hole golf courses, sculpted from the foothills of the Front Range; 16

COLORADO SPRINGS Convention Update

Elizabeth Jones, former chief engraver of the United States Mint, has agreed to attend the 1993 Early Spring Convention. Plans call for a reception in her honor hosted by Women in Numismatics (WIN) and a special display of her work.

Thomas Law of Fort Worth, Texas, will exhibit at the ANA Museum "The Gold Coin Types of George III," a display that won him the Howland Wood Memorial Best of Show Award at the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida.

Especially for collectors and dealers wishing to utilize the vast holdings of the ANA Library during their stay in the Colorado Springs area, the Resource Center and Museum have announced extended hours: 8:30 a.m. to 9 p.m., Wednesday, March 10, through Friday, March 12; and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday, March 13.

Look for an Early Spring Convention pre-registration card in next month's issue of The Numismatist.

Convention Chairman Ken Bressett is arranging a one-of-a-kind display at the ANA Museum: four 1804 dollars and two 1913 Liberty Head nickels, marking the first time these remarkable rarities have been gathered together in one exhibit.

In addition, an on-site movie theater, four fine restaurants, and a variety of contemporary boutiques for men, women and children offer alternative amusements.

Two separate buildings (the Main and West complexes) house 550 guest rooms, each within a short walk or shuttle ride from the spacious exposition center, where the hobby's most successful and knowledgeable dealers will display their offerings. Special group rates are available to members at $90 for single and $100 for double occupancy. Those wishing to take advantage of these special rates should contact the ANA Convention Department, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, telephone 719/632-2646 or fax 719/634-4085. A deposit equal to one night's room rental is required.

Applications Solicited for Numismatic Intern Program

Once again, the ANA is offering internships that will allow two numismatic enthusiasts an opportunity to work for eight weeks in the Association's Museum, Library and Educational Services Department in Colorado Springs. During the program, which begins June 1, 1993, the interns will assist with inventorying, cataloging, deaccessioning and other collection management activities, and will have an opportunity to help plan and prepare museum exhibits, conduct research, and much more.

The ANA will provide meals, lodging, a $50 weekly stipend (or equivalent compensation package) and a round-trip travel allowance of up to $500. Successful candidates also will receive a scholarship for the course of their choice at the Association's week-long Summer Conference, July 10-16.

Applicants for the 1993 ANA Internship in Numismatics should be undergraduate or graduate college students or recent high school graduates, at least 18 years old and capable of living on their own. They should have a suitable academic background (social sciences, humanities, etc.), related experience, and a demonstrated knowledge and interest in numismatics. All candidates must meet employee security requirements, and should be bondable and capable of precise, detail-

Austrian Mint Rolls Out Red Carpet for Grand Prize Winner

Virg Marshall III, winner of last year's ANA Centennial Membership Contest, has returned from his grand-prize trip to Vienna, Austria, sponsored by the Austrian Mint. "I was expecting to have a good time there, but little did I realize how much I would enjoy the trip," he reports.

Marshall, a resident of Wymore, Nebraska, made the long flight to Vienna with his brother, Paul, who lives in Los Angeles. They left the United States on Thursday, September 3, and arrived in Vienna the following day. "The seven hours difference in time between Nebraska and Austria made the night very short," Marshall explains, "but we never did experience jet lag."

Upon their arrival at the airport in Vienna, Marshall and his brother were greeted by Kerry Tattersall, marketing director for the Mint; Christian Kölbl, assistant marketing director; and their associate, Ms. Frank. "Our hosts made us feel very much at home," says Marshall. "They presented both of us with gifts and gave us a printed schedule of the week." And what a week it was!

First they were whisked away in a limousine to the Marriott Hotel in downtown Vienna. Then, bright and early Saturday morning, they were treated to a sightseeing tour of the city, followed by a little free time before the Mozart Symphony that evening.

Sunday was a day of prayer, play and pastry for the brothers. They rose early and took a 25-kilometer bus ride to Heiligenkreuz to worship with some missionary acquaintances. "After worship services, we ate with our friends, and then they took us to visit an old castle. We then spent the remainder of the afternoon sipping 'kaffee' and eating tortes in a quaint little cafe in Baden." That evening, they did some more sightseeing with tram and subway permits furnished by the Austrian Mint.

Although Sunday was packed with food and fun, Marshall says, "Monday was the numismatic highlight of the trip. Our cordial host, Christian, escorted us to the Austrian National Bank, where we viewed the great coin collection housed there." Marshall says their host at the bank, Mrs. Steller, was wonderful.

The tour continued on to the Austrian Mint, where the brothers met Managing Director Paul Berger. "He visited with us for some time before he presented each of us a large medal, specially inscribed to remind us of our visit." Marshall describes the design on the medal as a high relief of the city of Vienna and says, "This medal is now one of the most prized possessions I have in the area of numismatics."

Next Virgil and Paul were escorted to the office of the mint's chief engraver, A. Zierler. While there, the brothers got a sneak peek at a die for the new 20-shilling coin to be produced in 1993.

The last stop on their tour of the facility was the production room, where the two watched the minting of the gold Vienna Philharmonic coin. "It was definitely a 'hands on' experience that I'm sure regular visitors would never be allowed," Marshall says. "The employees were very helpful, even to the point of stopping the equipment to explain just what was being done."

With the tour of the Mint complete, Kölbl took the brothers for a leisurely lunch at a nearby hotel. But the royal treatment was far from over. After their midday meal, the trio continued on to the large museum where the Imperial coin collection resides. "Although the museum was closed on Monday, we were given a special tour by a museum official," Marshall says.

In closing, Marshall expresses "Thanks to the American Numismatic Association and the Austrian Mint for giving me and my brother, Paul, such a enjoyable and memorable week." • oriented work. Computer, foreign language and numismatic skills are desirable. Applications must be received at ANA headquarters no later than April 15, 1993.

Individuals interested in the 1993 Internship in Numismatics program can request an application by writing to Internship Program, American Numismatic Association, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, or by calling 719/632-2646 (fax 719/634-4085).

Coin Week Contest Winners Cash In

National Coin Week yielded big rewards this year for all involved. Centered around the theme "Discover New Worlds through Coin Collecting," the event generated fresh interest and support for numismatics.

The main event of the week was a contest designed to heighten the general public's awareness of the hobby. Participating clubs and members set up exhibits, wrote articles, presented talks and clinics, and conducted various other activities. Through their efforts, involved numismatists brought new collectors into the fold and earned valuable points toward some nice rewards.

In the "Club A" category (clubs with 75 or more members), the first-place prize of one all-expense-paid young numismatist scholarship and one adult scholarship (tuition, room and board) was awarded to the Clements Coin Club of Sugar Land, Texas. The second-place prize of one YN scholarship and a set of ANA correspondence courses went to the Treasure Coast Coin Club of Fort Pierce, Florida.

The 61-member Golden Spread Coin Club of Amarillo, Texas, took first-place honors in the "Club B" category (less than 75 members) and received one YN and one adult scholarship. Members accumulated close to 4,000 points during the contest. Winning the category's second-place prize of one YN scholarship and one set of correspondence courses was the Mid Hudson Coin Club of Pleasant Valley, New York. Indiana's Elkhart Coin Club garnered the third-place prize of one YN scholarship for its efforts.

Gerda Birkholz of Largo, Florida, won first prize in the "Individual Adult" category and received an adult scholarship. Second-place winner Gar Calling Summer Conference Scholarship Sponsors and Applicants!

Each summer the ANA offers a number of full scholarships to allow qualified young numismatists the opportunity to attend the annual Summer Conference. But scholarships often are available from local and national numismatic organizations and private individuals as well. Limited financial resources need not prevent young people from taking advantage of this important educational offering.

To be considered for an ANA scholarship, applicants must be between the ages of 13 and 17 as of January 1, 1993. Applicants will be judged on their involvement in both numismatic and extracurricular activities, financial need and general character. This year's Summer Conference (which happens to mark the program's silver anniversary) is scheduled for July 10-16 at The Colorado College and ANA headquarters in Colorado Springs, Colorado. The conference covers a wide range of numismatic subjects, and there is sure to be a class to interest any serious young numismatist. ANA scholarships cover tuition, room, board and round-trip airfare to Colorado Springs.

Qualifications for applicants vary from sponsor to sponsor. Most cover all the costs of the seminar, including transportation. Clubs, individuals and organizations that are considering offering a 1993 YN Summer Conference scholarship are asked to contact the ANA Educational Services Department to facilitate conference planning. The ANA also can help promote private scholarships, providing a larger pool of YNs from which to select a recipient.

To determine if your coin club or other numismatic organization offers such a benefit, check with your club president, secretary or treasurer. Applications for ANA scholarships can be obtained from the ANA Educational Services Department, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, telephone 719/632-2646 or fax 719/634-4085. Deadline for receipt of applications is April 15. •

NUMISMATIC NARRATIVES

The Music of Money

"The Vienna Philharmonic has been associated with all the great names of Viennese music, including Gustav Mahler, Johann Strauss, Wilhelm Furtwängler and others from around the world," says numismatic writer and musician Gene Hessler. And now this bastion of good music is celebrating its 150th anniversary. To commemorate the event, the Austrian Mint will issue three coins by the end of 1992.

"Unique is a term often misused in the numismatic world," Hessler says. "However, these coins are unique in that they are the only coins that commemorate the history of an orchestra—a world-famous orchestra."

The Vienna Philharmonic was organized in 1842 under the leadership of Otto Nicolai. Culling musicians from the orchestra of the Court Opera for concerts in Vienna, Nicolai started one of the world's greatest philharmonics on its unsteady way. But as Hessler points out, things weren't rocky for long. "The Vienna Philharmonic overcame all the usual difficulties, consolidated its activities, and soon received a lasting reputation from its regular performances that have continued since 1860."

During the early years, the orchestra performed regularly under the auspices of conductors Nicolai and Carl Eckert. In tribute to the philharmonic's founder, the commemorative 100-schilling silver coin bears his likeness on its reverse. The obverse shows

The Austrian Mint has issued three unique coins in honor of the Vienna Philharmonic's 150th anniversary. This 100-schilling silver coin pays tribute to the philharmonic's founder, Otto Nicolai, on the reverse. The obverse shows the orchestra's first home, now demolished, near the Corinthian Gate.

The 500-schilling gold coin depicts the present-day State Opera, with its famous Orpheus curtain, and the orchestra's symbol superimposed on five instruments. The obverse shows the grand Musikverein, the Philharmonic's present residence.

the now-demolished theater near the Corinthian Gate where the philharmonic first played in 1842.

The second commemorative issued for this event is a 500-schilling gold coin. As Hessler describes, "It has the orchestra symbol superimposed on five instruments on one side and the interior of the present State Opera in Vienna on the other. The famous Orpheus curtain is visible in this view of the stage."

A gold 1,000-schilling coin is the third in the series, with the Musikverein, the Vienna Philharmonic's present residence, on the obverse. "It was here that the American composer Leonard Bernstein often guest-conducted the orchestra as one who championed the music of Anton Bruckner and Gustav Mahler, two names synonymous with the Vienna Philharmonic," Hessler explains. The reverse bears a portrait of Johann Strauss, who maintained close ties with the orchestra from 1906-44, and the Philharmonic's decorative organ, which resides in the Golden Hall at the Musikverein.

The Philharmonic has a rich and fascinating past, including its atypical practice of allowing members to elect guest conductors, as the orchestra has no permanent conductor. "In 1938, the Jewish members (of the Philharmonic) were forced to leave the orchestra. However, Wilhelm Furtwängler intervened and saved it from dissolving," Hessler says. And, in the early days, the orchestra toured throughout Europe, visited South America and played at the 1900 Paris World Fair.

"The 1992 Vienna Philharmonic commemorative coins are limited to

FIDEM Congress a First in Great Britain

The Fédération Internationale de la Médaille (FIDEM) held its XXIII Congress on September 16-19. The gathering marked the first time the Congress has been held in London and, according to FIDEM President Lars Lagerqvist, it was "the most marvelous we have ever had."

About 350 delegates from five continents were welcomed to the Congress by the Duke of Gloucester. The next three days were filled with talks, presentations, demonstrations and workshops by some of the world's leading medalists. Attendees also were treated to receptions held in their honor by the British Museum, Spink and Sons, and the Polish Cultural Institute. During an evening hosted by the British Royal Mint, awards were given to creators of outstanding contemporary art medals. The Congress ended with an impressive dinner held in London's historic Guildhall.

Numismatic Video Network Introduced

Coin collectors now have access to videotapes that can help with their favorite pastime. David Lisot, president of Advision, Inc., has announced the creation of a nationwide network of "Video Rental Centers for Collectors" through which independent coin dealers will rent and sell videos about coin collecting. Available videos cover every topic imaginable, including gold coins, silver dollars, bank notes and ancient coins, and instructional videos about coin grading and counterfeit detection. Many of the tapes are sponsored by prominent numismatic organizations, such as the American Numismatic Association, the American Numismatic Society, the Industry Council for Tangible Assets and the Professional Numismatists Guild.

Adding to the network's appeal is the ease with which the videos can be obtained. Customers simply select a video, put down a deposit equal to the video's retail price, and take it home for a full week. At the end of the week, the customer can return the video to the dealer for a full refund of the deposit (minus a rental fee of $3 to $5)

British Royal Mint and Collectors Bid Adieu to Deputy Master Garrett

December 31 signals the end of Anthony D. Garrett's tenure as Deputy Master of the British Royal Mint. Reflecting on his five years of service to the Mint, Garrett notes that his greatest challenge—and, indeed, his greatest accomplishment—has been to make the Mint a successful business by "private-sector standards."

"The Mint recently developed the necessary commercial direction," he explains. Although Garrett admits that the British Royal Mint is "limited as to what it can do with its money," he would like to see the government enterprise endowed with freedoms similar to those enjoyed by publicly owned companies.

The British Royal Mint maintains complete control of all steps of coinage production, including melting and refining the raw metal, and manufacturing the metal "strip" and planchets. It has explored a variety of coinage techniques, including the production of "plated" coins. Says Garrett, "I don't think the Mint would be as successful if it hadn't been so willing to investigate new procedures."

The Mint takes great pride in its high-quality proof and commemorative coins, which have developed a loyal following among British and American collectors. Most popular are those issues celebrating the royal family, ships and animals, in that order.

When not producing the nation's circulating coins, the Mint and its staff of six engravers devotes its time to designing coinage for other countries, which comprises 73 percent of its total production. "The emerging republics in the former Soviet Union present new opportunities for the Mint," Garrett notes. "At present, we are helping a number of them set up their own minting facilities."

The Deputy Master's successor, who had yet to be appointed as of October 26, officially assumes the post on January 1. Anthony Garrett plans to retire, noting that he "enjoys traveling and will continue to do so." •

Silver Bells and Silver Bars

ART BARS

With their imaginative and often intricate designs, privately issued art bars capture the attention of collectors, especially at gift-giving time.

by Jean Roberts
ANA 115657

THE MONTH OF December always poses an interesting challenge to collectors: how to link numismatics with the festivities and significance of the holiday season? Many of the standard approaches—coins of the Bible, St. Nick notes, Christmas puddings laced with sixpence—have been exhausted over the years.

However, one facet of the hobby continues to surprise and inspire: silver art bars. Hundreds of intricately engraved bars are introduced each year by private manufacturers, not only for Christmas and Hanukkah, but for a variety of holidays, events and collecting interests.

Art bars appeared on the scene shortly after 1964, when the government took the United States off the silver standard. Once citizens were permitted to own the metal in its raw form, silver producers sought to promote public interest and ownership.

Art bars generally contain one ounce of .999 fine silver. But what distinguishes them from mere bullion is their resemblance to medallic art, both in form and function. Many are limited editions and display exquisitely crafted, imaginative designs on the obverse; the reverse usually carries the manufacturer's name and/or logo.

"I got interested in art bars in 1970," says Steve Rood, an avid coin collector for more than 40 years. "It's an entertaining hobby. Still, most people don't even know what an art bar is."

Rood promotes the hobby by giving 1-ounce bars to friends and family. "Sometimes I send a silver 'thank you' to my doctor or dentist. My favorite is a 'tooth fairy bar,' which I give to my grandchildren when they lose a tooth. . . . No matter what the occasion, there's an appropriate silver art bar!"

Further advancing the cause, Rood, with publisher J. Archie Kidd, produced An Indexed Guide Book of Silver Art Bars. A popular reference now

In the mid 1970s, the Hamilton Mint produced two oval ingots picturing "The Night before Christmas" (top) and "A Child's Christmas Memories."

"DEALERS GOT INTO the act by producing newsletters that were very informative, as well as pushing the bars they had available."

.....

The Mount Everest Mint issued an unusual set of triangular silver pieces celebrating the "Twelve Days of Christmas." Enameled ornaments adorn the branches of an evergreen on a rectangular Ceeco Mint bar.

in its 5th edition, it rivals Krause Publications' Standard Catalog of World Coins in scope.

The silver art bar craze launched a number of hobby groups in the '70s, among them the Barkeepers Club and the USA-BC Club. Reports art bar collector William Cassin, "Dealers got into the act by producing newsletters that were very informative, as well as pushing the bars they had available.

"[But] things began to unravel after several years of prosperity. Dealers had difficulty finding interesting items to print and soon discovered there was too much time involved in relation to the benefits [they received]. They soon gave up. Bar clubs followed the same path."

The International Association of Silver Art Collectors (IASAC) emerged in 1985, thanks to the efforts of founding fathers Rood, Kidd, Cassin, Duane Spellman and Harvey Rose. "High hopes and ideals started things off," Cassin says. "A good nucleus of collectors got things rolling." Since then, the organization has experienced its ups and downs, but a core of solid supporters ensures that its goals of hobby promotion and education are met. (For more information about the IASAC, write to Nancy Yee,

For the holiday season, Duane Spellman (as owner and operator of The Mint) has produced both 1- and 2-ounce silver bars.

"I COLLECTED SILVER art bars from 1972 to 1980, and then I got rid of them all. I started again around 1984 . . . I think silver bar collecting is one of the best hobbies . . ."

SilverTowns of Winchester, Indiana, has produced a number of silver bars that mark holidays and special events.

On this two-sided bar, Joel Rettew celebrated Comet Kohoutek, Christmas and the New Year of 1974.

The Crown Mint issued two bars bearing Christmas trees, one colorfully highlighted with shimmering enamel.

P.O. Box 28415, Seattle, WA 98118. Dues are $15 for the first year, $10 for renewals.)

Comments Eugene R. Daley, a charter member of the IASAC, "I collected silver art bars from 1972 to 1980, and then I got rid of them all. I started again around 1984 and have replaced all of them but about two dozen. I am still working on these for the future. I think silver bar collecting is one of the best hobbies around for anyone."

This sampling of silver bars offers holiday greetings as well as a collecting challenge for the new year. For enthusiasts, it is perhaps the most rewarding of avocations—bar none. •

An avid collector of commemorative and art medals, Jean Roberts remembers receiving her first silver bar in a Christmas stocking in 1974.

Practical Tips for Settling a Numismatic Estate

Even with careful estate planning, a numismatist's heirs frequently must contend with special problems and issues.

by David S. Lande
ANA 74934

AN ARTICLE IN the March 1992 issue of The Numismatist dealt with "Estate Planning for the Numismatist" (p. 324), that is, how collectors can arrange for the eventual transfer of their numismatic property and perhaps minimize the cost and tax burden of that transfer. But regardless of whether or not a collector has planned for the disbursement of personal property following his or her demise, some practical steps must be taken if the property includes, among other things, numismatic items.

Tracking Down the Collection

IF IT IS believed the deceased owned numismatic property, but none can be located, a logical place to look is a safe-deposit box in a bank—usually, but not necessarily, the bank where the deceased conducted most of his or her banking. From time to time, people change banks for their everyday needs (checking and savings accounts, etc.), but generally they do not transfer their valuables from one bank vault to another unless they move a substantial distance away.

Accordingly, if the location of the vault is not known, the executor of the estate should check those banking institutions where the deceased maintained routine accounts. Often this can be accomplished simply by sending a written inquiry and a copy of the death certificate to the bank. If all else fails, examine the decedent's checking account ledger—it may indicate payment of a vault fee, a good clue that a safe-deposit box exists.

If the deceased left a will, it may be necessary to submit the will for probate before the safe-deposit box can be opened. An exception is the case in which the deceased is known to have had a will, but the will itself cannot be found. Most states have a procedure for submitting an application for

If the location of a collection is unknown, contact the banking institution where the deceased conducted most of his or her banking. The collection may be stashed in a safe-deposit box.

... THE BANK GENERALLY opens the safe-deposit box in the presence of the family member or friend ... , permits an inventory of its contents, and then re-seals the box ...

Unless the market for the bequeathed numismatic material is high, the sale of the items should be deferred.

the issuance of a court order, allowing the applicant to search the vault for a will. The process of obtaining the court order usually is relatively simple, as it is intended to accommodate situations in which an interested family member or friend may be acting, at least at the outset, without the assistance of a lawyer. However, depending on the procedures set forth by the state, it may be somewhat time-consuming.

Once the order is obtained, the bank generally opens the safe-deposit box in the presence of the family member or friend who obtained the order, permits an inventory of its contents, and then re-seals the box, pending further estate settlement. (In New York State, for example, the bank is required to forward any will found in the vault directly to the Surrogate's Court.)

If a will already has been probated, or if no will exists, then the executor or an administrator appointed by the court can open the vault, subject to the laws and rules of the agency that collects state estate taxes. At one time, New York required a representative of the State Department of Taxation and Finance to be present when the vault was opened, obviously to prevent families from concealing valuable assets (such as cash, jewels or rare coins) in an attempt to avoid estate taxes.

However, in this age of budget-strapped government agencies, the procedure has been eliminated. Instead, a representative of the estate must apply to and obtain from the state taxation department a form known as a "tax waiver" for the contents of the vault. The certificate waives any claim the taxation department may file against the bank for turning over valuable contents of a vault to an estate representative who subsequently fails to declare the items on the state estate tax return.

Distribution or Liquidation?

ONCE THE NUMISMATIC property is located, many determinations and decisions must be made. Obviously, the heirs should identify the items and estimate their value to the best of their ability. (If the decedent's collecting interests were unusual or exotic, the assistance of an outside authority may be necessary.)

Numismatic auctions generally are the preferred method of liquidating a collection because it is thought they provide the greatest assurance of obtaining current market prices.

CHRISTMAS GIFT COINS 1992

- ★ FOR GIFTS
- ★ FOR COLLECTION
- ★ FOR SOUVENIRS

Christmas greetings can say as much, but no greetings can match the warmth and joy expressed by a special Pobjoy Seasons Greetings coin-card.)

Traditional Christmas coins mounted for giving on a special silk-finish card featuring "Father Christmas" are available this year for the Gibraltar and Isle of Man governments -- at no increase over last year's popular price of just $7.95 each (or 11 for $79.50, enough for many close family members). Each seven-sided legal tender 50-pence coin is struck in glittering Proof in cupronickel. (Special Proof sterling silver versions are available for collectors, also.)

The Isle of Man has issued Christmas 50-pence coins of a different design each year since 1980. Gibraltar has issued Christmas coins of special design since 1988. Real circulation coins. Brilliant Uncirculated specimens of these coins are paid out at face value by commercial banks in the two British associated states during the Holiday season. They disappear fast and are rarely seen in commerce again, so treasured are they by local citizens and Holiday visitors from overseas!

Please allow up to 8 weeks' delivery on sterling silver Christmas coins, but the cupri coin-cards should be available soon for customers in time for Holiday giving.

Early Numismatics of the Virgin Islands

Coinage and paper money of the Caribbean isles present a history of European occupation and turmoil.

by Jan M. Dyroff
ANA 118418

NO COIN, TOKEN or paper money exists on its own, but rather is part of a whole, an element of the society that had need of it. Placing numismatic items in their cultural milieu provides not only a better understanding of their purpose and role, but also a greater appreciation of their use and design.

The U.S. Virgin Islands—St. Croix, St. Thomas and St. John, along with a number of smaller islets—have a rich and varied numismatic history. Situated in the Caribbean Sea east of Puerto Rico, the group of islands once was known as the Danish West Indies.

In November 1493 Christopher Columbus arrived in the vicinity of the islands. He named the first and largest he encountered "Santa Cruz" (later St. Croix). On November 14 his expedition came upon the smaller and more numerous islands, which he called "Santa Ursula y las Once Mil Virgenes" (after St. Ursula and the 11,000 virgins, who, according to legend, were killed when returning from a pilgrimage to Rome). In popular parlance, these became known as the Virgin Islands.

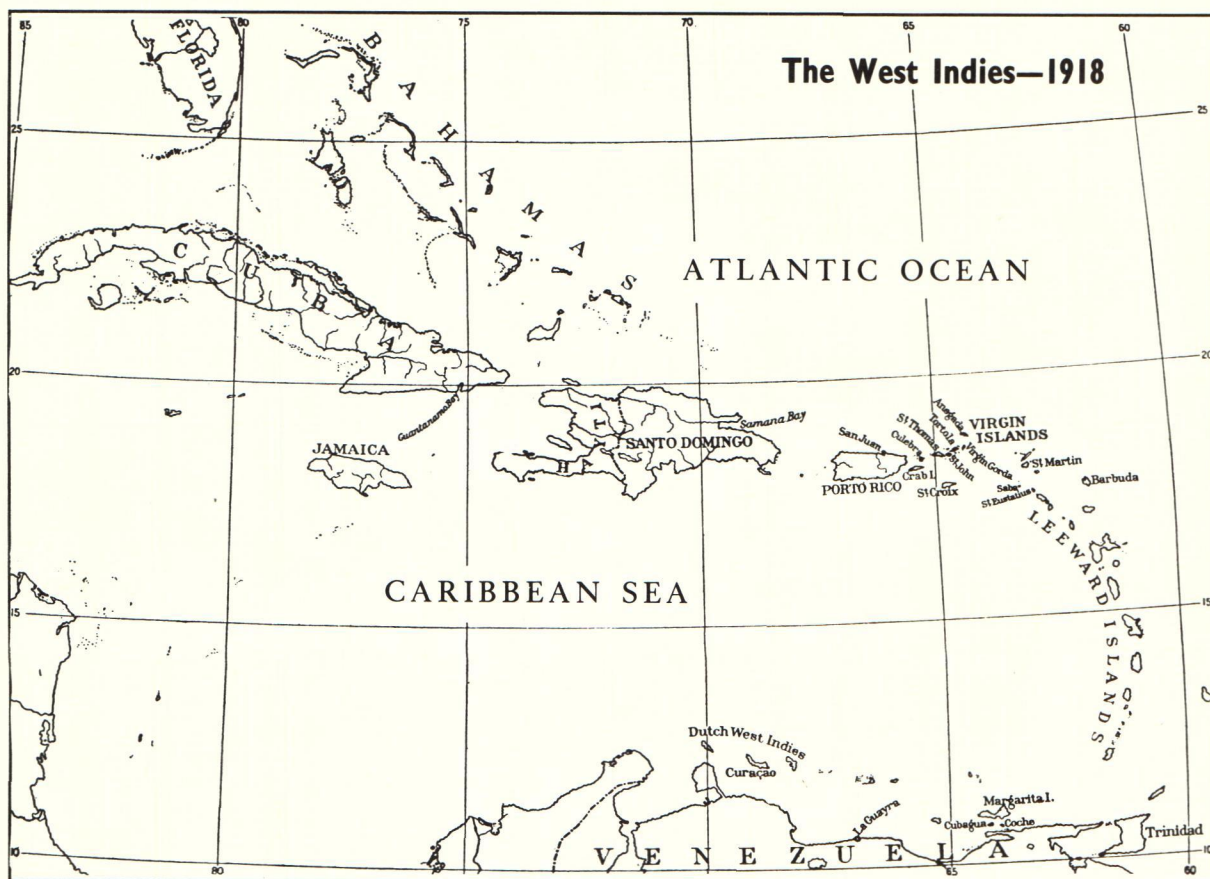

Although the islands were verdant and fertile, they had no gold or silver to offer, so they were not of predominant interest to the Spanish who followed Columbus into the region. It was not until 1555 that a Spanish expedition defeated the native Caribs, possibly taking them as slaves to work in the mines on Hispaniola, and claimed the land for the Spanish Crown.

Spanish settlements on the islands, if indeed there were any, no doubt were small, perhaps fishing settlements or military camps. Circulating money might have included bronzes from Santo Domingo and silver cobs from Mexico and South America.

The recorded numismatic history of the islands begins with two silver medals struck by the Dutch to commemorate a naval victory off St. Thomas in 1599. Both carry an allegorical reference to Jason's ship Argo of Greek mythology and a tributary accolade to Maurice, Prince of Orange.

Eight Carib Indians man a large sailing raft (above). Many Caribs chose suicide over slavery in Spanish gold mines.

What these medals suggest is that Spain's monopoly in the West Indies was being challenged, often successfully, by other European powers, notably England, France and Holland. By the 1620s, English and Dutch settlers had begun to establish themselves on Santa Cruz, and in 1625 Denmark's King Christian IV gave permission to Dutch merchants in Copenhagen to promote trade between Denmark and the West Indies. It was also in this year that France's real interest in Santa Cruz began, with early settlements established in the 1630s.

Within 15 years, the population of Santa Cruz had swelled to 600. Rivalries among the three nationalities on the island turned violent in 1645—the Dutch governor killed the British governor and, in retribution, the English executed the murderer. The bloodshed led the Dutch to abandon their plantations on Santa Cruz in favor of the friendlier environment on St. Maarten and St. Eustatius. Residents of a British settlement on Crab Island were massacred by the Spanish in 1647; three years later the governor of Puerto Rico sent an expedition that succeeded in evicting all the English.

tunity, taking the island and renaming it St. Croix. All trade was coordinated by the French West India Company. The island prospered at first, but government excesses soon reduced it to ruin.

In 1653 St. Croix was willed to the Knights of Malta, who, in turn, sold their interests to the French West India Company for 500,000 livres in 1664. Beginning with the administration of Governor DuBois, restrictions on trade in St. Croix were removed, creating mercantile freedom and prosperity for nearly half a century.

Since St. Croix was under French control, France's colonial coinage likely circulated. In the late 17th century, then, counterstamped, billon "douzains" authorized by the edict of 1670 would have been current on the island. However, by the turn of the 18th century, the fortunes of St. Croix began to wane, and the focus on agricultural and commercial development ceased. For what Gallic presence remained, the French colonial bronze coinage of the '720s probably sufficed.

Until this time, St. Croix was thought of as an entity apart from the Virgin Islands. The conjunction of St. Croix, St. Thomas and St. John would not come about until the Danes took control of the area.

Although Denmark's interest in the region began in the third decade of the 17th century, the Danes did not inhabit the area until the 1650s. Their initial stronghold was Fort Christian at Charlotte Amalie on the island of St. Thomas.

A signal event transpired on March 11, 1671, when the Danish West India Company was established at Copenhagen, with the King of Denmark as a principal shareholder. As its first order of business, the company claimed jurisdiction over St. Thomas and all surrounding islands.

On August 2, 1671, the first company ship, the Golden Crown, left Denmark for the islands under Captain Arent Hendricksen. In October a second ship, the Pharoah, departed, carrying Jorgen Iversen, who would become governor of the islands.

After his arrival in May of the following year, Iversen established Government House at Charlotte Amalie. One of his earliest decrees makes it clear that early colonial St. Thomas was a cashless society, as payments for penalties and taxes were prescribed in tobacco.

As the Danish proceeded to secure one part of the islands, the British wrested control of Tortola and Virgin Gorda (the nucleus of the present-day British Virgin Islands) from the Dutch in 1672. By the end of the decade, sugar cane had been introduced on the islands, and in 1679 the Danish West India and Guinea Company (formed seven years earlier when the company merged with its African counterpart) purchased two ports on Africa's Gold Coast, which provided slaves to meet the agricultural needs of the islands' landowners.

The islands continued on a partially cashless basis throughout the rest of the 17th century. In 1684 the governor allowed debts to be paid in sugar, but there were increasing indications that specie was coming into use.

In 1687 the Duchy of Brandenburg was, for a variety of complicated diplomatic and financial reasons, granted a 30-year settlement on St. Thomas. The Brandenburg Company, mainly a Dutch interest, set up its factories at the western end of Charlotte Amalie. The Brandenburgers dealt in cash, and their treasure was the object of a successful raid by French buccaneers in 1688. (A notable instance of their reliance on hard money is seen in the Brandenburg Company's lease of Crab Island to George Thormohlen, a planter who in 1689 agreed to pay an annual sum of 3,000 pieces-of-eight for a period of 10 years.)

In 1707 Pere Labat, a visitor to St. Thomas, noted that the island had prospered from Denmark's neutrality in the broils of Europe and that the harbor was busy with many South American vessels that brought with them "much riches in specie and bars." The Danish West India and Guinea Company issued its first coinage in 1708—a 2 ducats struck in gold traditionally believed to have come from the company's African holdings. The coin proved to be more of a trade piece than competition for the Spanish gold coinage that commonly circulated in the islands.

By the middle of the following decade, indigo was cultivated on St. Thomas, and in 1716 the privileges of the Brandenburg Company ended. In the year following, Denmark formally acquired from France the right to St. John, this upon the payment of 150,000 Spanish dollars.

While Spanish monies were the basis of commerce in the region, Denmark began to take steps to control the monetary situation in the islands. In 1717 the Danish governor authorized an issue of paper notes, presumably denominated in "rigsdaler," for commercial purposes and to accommodate payments by the government. In 1718 the first land tax was imposed at the rate of 20 skilling per 100 square feet, with a head tax of 2½ rigsdaler for each man, woman and slave.

St. Thomas' prosperity increased in 1724, when the island was declared a free port. To meet the growth in the economy, all the notes of 1717 were withdrawn and replaced with a new issue of 2,000 notes in values of 1, 2, 4 and 8 rigsdaler, with a total value of 3,750 rigsdaler. Two years later, additional currency was issued, but soon was withdrawn. At this time, the need for small change was met by the importation of Danish 2-skilling pieces (which were rated at 6 West Indian skilling to 5 Danish skilling).

In 1734 the company petitioned for the right to issue its own coinage, and, though permission was granted, six years passed before the first coins reached the islands. Approved for release on January 1, 1740, the initial coinage consisted of 1- and 2-skilling pieces in copper and 12-skilling pieces in .500 silver. Twelve skilling equaled $\frac{1}{8}$ daler, or 1 Spanish real. In consequence, the 12-skilling piece became known as the "Danish real," though intrinsically it was worth less than the Spanish real.

Under Frederik V, who came to the throne in 1746, another series of coins was issued by the Danish West India and Guinea Company. In 1748 two types of 12-skilling pieces were struck (with a bust or monogram on the obverse, and a sailing ship on the reverse); the following year marked the issuance of gold 1 and 2 ducats, presumably trade coins. These were the company's last coinage issues. In 1753 negotiations to terminate the enterprise began, and in 1754 control of the company's holdings came under the purview of the Danish Ministry of Commerce (although the company continued as a trading entity).

In 1755 the crown purchased the company's privileges for 2.2 million pieces-of-eight, including all of the monies issued by the company. This year saw the colonial governor issue paper currency in values of 1, 2, 10, 50 and 100 daler, followed by yet another issue in 1756. Such a profusion of paper money was not only unpopular, but also dangerous to the stability of the economy.

The supply of coins was augmented by an issue of 12-skilling pieces in 1757. Paper money subsequently was regulated by royal decree, which stipulated that only 3,000 notes of the 1- and 2-daler denominations could circulate. The unpopularity of the notes continued, and in June 1758 all paper currency was declared obsolete.

By the early 1760s, Baron H.C. von Schimmelman had acquired a significant interest in the company. Noted for his beneficence of character, he owned plantations and sugar refineries on St. Croix. On March 28, 1763, he secured a decree for an issue of new coinage for the islands, which was produced from 1763 to 1767.

These coins continued the previous motifs, with the royal monogram on the obverse and a sailing ship on the reverse. The Copenhagen Mint struck 12- and 24-skilling coins in 1763, 1764, 1765 and 1767, producing only a 24-skilling piece in 1766. A 6-skilling denomination was added in

The Copenhagen Mint struck 24-skilling coins from 1763 to 1767. When Christian VII assumed the throne of Denmark in 1766, the monogram on the coin's obverse was changed.

In 1766 Christian VII assumed the throne of Denmark, and his confirmation of the islands' free-port status ensured continued prosperity. However, the needs of the area's economy outstripped the supply of coin. In March 1770, in response to an influx of copper imitations of the island coinage, penalties for counterfeiting were proclaimed. One of those indicted under the new laws was William Toles of "St. Kibs" (St. Kitts?) for the manufacture of "copper imitations of two reales" (24-skilling pieces).

CONCEIVABLY, SOME SHREWD individual suggested the less valuable Prussian coin as an equivalent to the 12-skilling piece . . .

The 12 skilling equaled 1/16 daler, or 1 Spanish real. Consequently, the 12-skilling piece became known as the "Danish real," though intrinsically it was worth less than the Spanish real.

The drain on the islands' money supply was constant, as the coinage of the Danish West Indies circulated not only in Denmark's three possessions, but also in the British Virgin Islands and, through the continuing Dutch interests in St. Thomas and St. Croix, in Curacao in the Netherlands Antilles.

In the latter part of the 18th century, one of the coins circulating in Curacao was the "stuber," possibly the Prussian 12-einen (1/12) thaler billon coin of the 1760s, which could have come to Curacao by way of the Danish islands. It is easy to see a strong resemblance between the obverse of the 1740 Danish 12 skilling and that of the Prussian piece (although the denomination of the Danish coin is expressed in Roman numerals, while the German piece bears an Arabic "12"). Conceivably, some shrewd individual suggested the less valuable Prussian coin as an equivalent to the 12-skilling piece, and, as the Danes were intent on preserving the integrity of their money, it was necessary that another use for the imposters be found, hence Prussian stubers in Curacao.

At this juncture, the agricultural focus of the islands began to shift, with 39 sugar and 43 cotton plantations on St. Thomas, and 27 sugar and 42 cotton plantations on St. John. In 1776 the old—but still circulating—Danish 2-skilling pieces were disallowed.

Island coinage continued in 1782, with the Copenhagen Mint striking 6- and 12-skilling issues bearing the date 1767. Six years later, royal credit notes were printed for the islands in denominations of 20, 50 and 100 rigsdaler. These were marked VESTINDISK COURANT ("Current in the West Indies") and were legal tender only in the islands.

The years 1790 and 1791 were marked by two issues from the Kongsberg Mint: 12 and 24 skilling. These were followed by strikings at the Altona Mint of 12 skilling in 1795 and of 12 and 24 skilling in 1800. (The Kongsberg and Altona coins continued to bear the 1767 date.) In addition, a shipment of Danish copper 1-skilling pieces was sent to the islands in 1797.

In the last decade of the century, a combination of strife in Europe and unrest on other islands in the West Indies caused a continuing increase in the population of St. Thomas and St. Croix. This influx, together with the islands' free-port status, guaranteed a stable economy; meanwhile, Denmark was in deeper and deeper financial straits.

As might be expected, the Napoleonic Wars spilled into the Caribbean, with Great Britain occupying the islands from March 1801 to February 1802 and again in 1806. By this time, Denmark was nearly bankrupt,

BY THEN, HOWEVER, the Industrial Revolution had begun and . . . forced a change in the area's economy and initiated a period of reform in . . . coinage.

and the islands' government had to issue paper money in 1806 to meet the needs of the market.

In 1808 Frederik VI was named king of Denmark, the ruler of a country ravaged by war and misalliance. After the fall of Napoleon and upon the proceedings of the Congress of Vienna, the Virgin Islands were formally restored to Denmark in 1815. By then, however, the Industrial Revolution had begun and the increasingly unprofitable work structure in the islands, coupled with a decrease in demand for sugar cane products, forced a change in the area's economy and initiated a period of reform in government, society and, last but not least, coinage.

And so, with the new face of Europe came the winds of change in the Virgin Islands, marking the end of an era and the cessation of the splendid little island coinage with its brave sailing ship. •

THE TURTLES OF AEGINA EUROPE'S FIRST COINS

The island-state of Aegina, located half-way between the coasts of Attica and the Argolid, was the first place in Europe to strike coins—silver staters—beginning around 550 B.C. On the obverse of these staters was a sea-turtle (replaced by a land-tortoise after ca. 450 B.C.), hence the popular term for these coins—turtles. The sea-turtle was an appropriate civic symbol for a people who acquired their wealth as seafaring traders. The reverse design was a crudely-punched incuse square divided into segments. The patterns formed by these segments vary widely. Three of the principal patterns are: "Union Jack," "mill-sail," and "skew-pattern." The weight standard of Aegina, based on a didrachm-stater of about 12.5 grams, was widely adopted in Greece and Asia Minor. The staters of the earliest period (ca. 550-480 B.C.) were especially popular, and remained in circulation until the fourth century B.C. A further testament to their popularity as a medium of exchange is the fact that Aeginetan "turtles" have turned up in hoards as far east as Afghanistan. Given their wide distribution, the staters often bear "banker's marks" which served in antiquity to confirm their silver content.

Due to a recent purchase, we are able to offer a selection of these oldest of all European coins in a variety of grades.

My Favorite Year: 1960

COLLECTORS
& COLLECTING

Coin collecting came of age in 1960, a year marked by exciting changes and the thrill of discovery.

EVERYONE—AT LEAST everyone who has a few miles on the odometer—has a favorite year. In the delightful movie by that name, the hero chose 1954, during the era of live television. My own favorite year—in numismatics, that is—is 1960, the year that coin collecting came of age.

Before that date, numismatics was a hobby, with gobs of unsophisticated charm. After 1960, it rapidly evolved into what today is called the “coin industry.” Being, as I am, a collector right down to my socks, I am dismayed at this transformation. Nevertheless, the year the big change occurred was so brimming with energy and excitement that it always will be my favorite year in numismatics.

By just about any reckoning, 1960 gave us 12 months to remember. The most important job in the world—the American Presidency—was up for grabs, and competing for it were two young Navy veterans: Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Senator John F. Kennedy. The issues of the contest are now mostly forgotten—Kennedy's Catholicism, the bogus "missile gap" between the United States and the Soviet Union, the fate of the Chinese islands of Quemoy and Matsu—but the election turned on a medium that still is very much with us: television. The debates between the two candidates propelled Kennedy to a razor-thin margin in November.

Lots of other things were happening, too. America was scrambling to catch up in the space race; Martin Luther King was jailed in Georgia; Elvis Presley was serving with the U.S. Army in West Germany; and the Pittsburgh Pirates rudely interrupted the New York Yankees' long-term lease on the World Championship of baseball.

In numismatics, 1960 began on a wave of growth. America had emerged from World War II with virtually the only intact industrial economy in the world. Although by that time nations like West Germany and Japan were beginning to catch up, the United States was still awash in prosperity and leisure time.

Hundreds of thousands of Americans were using that time and money to collect—and, increasingly to invest in—coins. The American Numismatic Association was experiencing unprecedented growth. Attendance records were smashed at virtually every coin show, and dealers could barely keep coins in stock.

The center of the coin collecting universe was the State of New York, where three of the leading dealers—New Netherlands, Stack's and Empire Coin Company—were located. But a number of collectors and dealers were heading west, where Abe Kosoff, late of New York City, was setting up shop in Encino, California. In the great stretch between the coasts, the Hollinbeck Coin Company of Des Moines, Iowa, and Bebee's in Omaha, Nebraska, were the main outposts of the collecting fraternity.

These dealers sold coins to a clientele consisting mainly of collectors. True, there were investors, as demonstrated by Dr. Robert Bilinski's pioneering book, A Guide to Coin Investment, which went through two editions (with four separate printings) in 1957 and 1958. That fact notwithstanding, one could leaf through the ads in the Numismatic Scrapbook Magazine or The Numismatist and hardly ever find the word "investor."

No, the collector was king. Leading the popularity parade were cents of all kinds—Indians, Lincolns and large—in all grades from About Good to Uncirculated. Many of these were popped into the ubiquitous blue Whitman coin folders, but countless others filled cigar boxes, jars and coffee cans across the nation. Least popular, interesting enough, were silver dollars, which invariably could be had, regardless of condition, for face value at any collector's friendly neighborhood bank.

Beginning in 1960, Whitman Publishing Company targeted department stores and shopping centers as outlets for its Red Book. Soon, people who had never set foot in a coin shop were buying the book and searching their pocket change.

Three things happened in 1960 that brought the pot to a boil and ultimately changed the hobby forever. These events occurred, chronologically, in the widely different cities of Racine, Wisconsin; Sidney, Ohio; and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The first two were accomplished by design, the last was utter serendipity. All combined to change the coin game profoundly in the long run. But over the short run, in 1960 everyone was too busy having fun to grasp the long-term impact of these transformations.

The first change actually took place in 1959, hard by the shore of Lake Michigan. Richard S. Yeo, who edited both the Handbook of United States Coins and A Guide Book of United States Coins under the pen name "Yeoman," huddled with his colleagues at Whitman Publishing. How could they increase sales of their "Blue Book" and "Red Book"? True, both were moving well—in the absence of weekly coin newspapers, these were the price-guide bibles for collectors—but they knew that the potential market was larger still.

Their answer was simple and effective. Both books were sold primarily by dealers in their shops and at shows, so Whitman was preaching to the converted. Beginning in 1960, however, Whitman began to aggressively target department stores and shopping centers as outlets. Soon, people who had never darkened the door of a coin shop or show were lugging home the distinctive blue- or red-covered books and going through their pocket change.

At a time when coins with a premium value were still in circulation, this process brought thousands of new accumulators into the field. Some went on to become true collectors; many others—probably a majority—never went beyond the "How much is it worth?" investment state. But, imagine the excitement of a time when new numismatists were created during every visit to Walgreens!

The second change was truly a leap of faith. An entrepreneur named J. Oliver Amos of Sidney, Ohio, saw an opportunity in the absence of a weekly publication about coins. The king of the periodical heap in 1960 was the Numismatic Scrapbook Magazine, a monthly smorgasbord of newsy

Some Crowns of Modern China

Silver crowns struck in late 19th- and early 20th-century China represent the changes brought about by political revolution and trade with the Western world.

by Qian Cao
ANA 148126

Although the Dragon dollar marked a giant step toward modernization of China's coinage, its dragon motif represented a traditional theme, symbolizing the 2,000-year-old imperial rule.

KEN BRESSETT

THE OPIUM WAR of 1840-42 put an end to "ancient" China. From that point, China was gradually transformed from an imperialistic, agrarian society to an industrialized, democratic republic. A selection of five silver coins that circulated after the Opium War demonstrates the political and economic changes of the period and the numismatic evolution from local, handmade coins to national, machine-struck legal tender.

After the war, Western merchants poured into China, and their coins flooded the Chinese market. United States Trade dollars and Morgan dollars are a testament to early Sino-American trade, but also served to influence the development of Chinese coinage.

Modern China's First Circulating Coin

THE 100-YEAR-OLD "Dragon dollar" holds a very important place in Chinese numismatic history. It modernized Chinese coinage and effectively stopped the overflow of foreign coins in the Chinese market. The Dragon dollar, China's first machine-struck silver dollar coin, was issued during the reign of Emperor Kwang-Hsu (1875-1908) for Western merchants. It was struck by the mint in Canton (Kwantung Province), China's southern port city.

Before the Dragon dollar was placed in circulation, trade in China was conducted through the exchange of silver taels, which had to be weighed for each purchase. The convenience, beauty and assigned values of the foreign coins brought in by Western merchants, plus the heavy losses incurred by the exchange of the pure-silver tael for the foreign pieces of only .900 fine silver, forced China to reform its coinage.

Realizing that the outpouring of large amounts of Chinese silver was creating serious economic problems, Lin Chei-Hsu, a provincial governor, suggested to Emperor Tao-Kwang (1821-50) that China strike its own silver dollars, but his idea was rejected. Later, Chang Chi-Tung, governor of Kwangtung and Kwansi Provinces, made the same suggestion to Emperor Kwang-Hsu, who approved. The Dragon dollar was officially issued in 1890.

The Dragon dollar gets its name from its reverse motif. The dragon was a typical totem in most of ancient China and was used as a symbol of China's emperors.

Production of the Dragon dollar changed traditional Chinese coinage in three ways: it was machine-made rather than handmade; it was a circular coin as opposed to a shoe-shaped ingot; and it lacked the central, square hole used in Chinese copper coins since the Ch'in Dynasty (221-207 B.C.).

However modern the Dragon dollar was, it still conveyed a traditional message. The dragon motif on the reverse was symbolic of the imperial rule that had lasted more than 2,000 years.

The Dragon dollar carries inscriptions in Chinese, Manchu and English. On the obverse, four large Chinese characters ("Kwang-Hsu Yuan Pao") and four small Manchu scripts at the center both translate as "currency of Kwang-Hsu reign." An English legend on the obverse reads KWANG-TUNG PROVINCE * 7 MACE AND 3 CANDAREENS *. On the reverse, Chinese characters above the dragon state "Made in Kwantung Province" and below indicate the coin's weight. The incorporation of varied characters and the combination of a foreign coinage style with a traditional Chinese motif reflects the Manchu rule during China's open-door period.

The Dragon dollar uses two different weights: 7.3 mace and 7.2 mace. When the dollar was first produced, the Chinese market was flooded with foreign silver dollars, most of which weighed 7.2 mace. Mint authorities intentionally made the new dollar 1 candareen heavier than the foreign coins. The Chinese people happily accepted the Dragon dollar; in fact, many rejected the foreign coins and hoarded the Dragon dollar. To keep the Dragon dollar in circulation, Mint authorities were forced to reduce its weight to 7.2 mace.

When the 7.3-mace dollar circulated, imperial authorities expressed displeasure because the emperor's name, Kwang-Hsu, on the obverse was surrounded by a legend in English. When the coin's weight was reduced to 7.2 mace, the English obverse legend was switched with the Chinese reverse legend so the emperor's name and the Chinese legend shared the same side. Interestingly, the new design is called the "right pattern," while the former is referred to as the "error pattern." Production of the Dragon dollar continued until the end of the Ch'ing Dynasty.

The First Silver Dollar of the Republic

THE "SZECHUAN HAN" dollar presents a virtual history of the achievements of the 1911 Revolution and marks a milestone in the evolution of Chinese coinage. Led by Dr. Sun Yat-sen, the modern, democratic movement to replace China's feudal monarchy rocked the entire world.

Issued by the military government in Szechuan Province in the early years of the Republic, the Szechuan Han dollar was well accepted by the public.

KEN BRESSETT

ISSUED BY THE military government in Szechuan Province . . . , the Szechuan Han dollar symbolizes an important turning point in Chinese history.

Yuan Shih-kai, who greatly influenced China's political, economic and financial development in the early 20th century, is featured on a silver dollar struck at several mints in 1914 and 1919-21.

KEN BRESSETT

On January 1, 1912, the provisional government of the Republic of China was founded in Nanking, and Dr. Sun was sworn in as provisional president. On February 1 the last emperor of the Ch'ing Dynasty was forced to abdicate the throne.

Issued by the military government in Szechuan Province during the early years of the Republic, the Szechuan Han dollar symbolizes an important turning point in Chinese history. The coins were struck in 1912 and 1914 at the Szechuan Mint. Founded in 1896, all of the Mint's machinery and dies were made in the United States, in New Jersey and Philadelphia.

The diameter of the Szechuan Han dollar is similar to that of the Dragon dollar, though its fineness is .880. A seal character "Han" is embossed at the center of the obverse, surrounded by 18 circles symbolizing the 18 provinces that declared independence. Above these are six characters written in regular script: "Chung Hua Min Kuo Yuan Nien" ("First Year of the Republic of China"). On the reverse is a floral design surrounded by four characters, "Sze Chuan Yin Pi" ("Szechuan silver dollar"), above and below which are the characters "Chun Cheng Fu Tsao" ("manufactured by the military government") and "Yi Yuan" ("one dollar").

Issuance of the Szechuan Han dollar coincided with the birth of the Republic of China. A large character "Han," symbolizing the drive to push out the Manchurians and restore the nation, is found on the obverse. The Szechuan Han dollar was well received by the public and circulated in the southwest portion of the country. Today, almost 80 years after it was issued, it has become rare and precious.

The Republic's First National Coin

THE "YUAN SHIH-KAI dollar," known as "Yuan's Head," circulated during the early years of the Republic. Yuan Shih-kai was an influential figure in China at the turn of the 20th century.

After the Wuchang Uprising broke out in Hupei in October 1911, the Ch'ing court reluctantly selected Yuan as prime minister. Later, Yuan forced both the abdication of the Ch'ing emperor and Dr. Sun Yat-sen's surrender of the provisional presidency. At the end of 1915, Yuan promised that the monarchy would be restored the following year. Reacting to strong opposition across the country, in March 1916 Yuan declared that he would abandon the title of emperor, but that his presidency would be maintained. He died of anxiety and fear in May of the same year.

Yuan Shih-kai exerted tremendous influence, not only on the politics of modern China, but also on the country's economic and financial development. One example can be seen in the currency issued during the early years of the Republic.

Various silver dollars circulated in China at the time, including the Dragon dollar, the Szechuan Han dollar, the "Eagle dollar" of the West, and silver coins of Japan. To unify the country's currency system, in February 1914 the Ministry of Finance promulgated the Regulations of the State Currency of the Republic of China.

After these regulations were adopted, a new silver coin was issued. The obverse depicts the profile of President Yuan Shih-kai in martial attire, above which is the year in which the coin was made. The reverse inscription in Chinese, meaning "one dollar," is surrounded by a pattern of agricultural products. The coin was designed by the renowned Italian sculptor L. Giogi. Following approval of the design by the president, the new coin was struck at major mints across the country in 1914 and 1919-21. Its weight and purity was uniform—7.2 mace and .900 fine (later .890 fine).

The coin gained popularity across the country because of its uniformity, design and standardized fineness. The Yuan's Head issue met the need for a unified state currency during the Republic's early industrial and business development, which was further ensured by the government's executive order. The coin gradually replaced the Dragon dollar and foreign silver coins in China.

A Memento of the Founding Father

DR. SUN YAT-SEN (1866-1925) is highly esteemed by the Chinese people in both Taiwan and mainland China. In honor of his great contributions to the establishment of the Republic, Chinese people respectfully call him the Founding Father.

He spent his childhood in Honolulu, Hawaii, where he was influenced by Western civilization. In the early 1890s, Dr. Sun dedicated himself to the anti-Ch'ing Dynasty rebellion and went on to become the first president of the Republic of China.

The silver Sun Yat-sen "Founding of the Republic" commemorative coin reminds us of his devotion to pursuing his dream of liberty, equality and

The Junk dollar was struck in 1933 and 1934 at the Shanghai Mint, which was completed in 1930. The building was patterned after the United States Mint in Philadelphia.

A silver dollar of 1912 and 1917 commemorates Dr. Sun Yat-sen and the founding of the Chinese Republic.

KEN BRESSETT

For his efforts in expelling the Manchus and establishing the Republic, Dr. Sun Yat-sen is referred to as China's Founding Father.

fraternity. Struck in 1912 by the Nanking Mint, the second issue of this coin appeared in 1917 and became the national legal tender of that time.

The designs of the two issues are almost the same: on the obverse, Dr. Sun's profile appears between two Chinese legends—"Republic of China" and "Founding of the Republic." Found on the reverse is the English inscription MEMENTO/BIRTH OF REPUBLIC OF CHINA. The 1912 coin has a five-sided ornament on either side of the word MEMENTO, while the ornaments on the 1917 have six sides.

The "Junk" Dollar Sets Sail

AS A WORLD political giant, Dr. Sun Yat-sen has been the subject of numerous biographies written in a variety of languages. In my opinion, none of them is so vivid and portable as the "Junk" dollar issued during the early years of the Republic of China.

Otherwise known as the Dr. Sun Yat-sen commemorative coin, the Junk dollar was issued in 1933 and 1934. After the Northern Expedition of 1926-27, the Chinese government decided to replace the Yuan Shih-kai dollar with a new coin portraying Dr. Sun.

In 1929 the government requested mints in Austria, Great Britain, Italy, Japan and the United States to submit designs for the proposed coin. The obverse was to feature a portrait of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, and the reverse three sailing ships. However, none of the designs were approved.

In the same year, the Chinese government invited E.W. Kemmerer of the United States to help work out a financial policy program and establish a design committee for the new coin. He submitted a proposal for gradual implementation of a currency system based on a gold standard, as well as a coin design. The government approved the manufacture of dies of his design at the U.S. Mint in Philadelphia. The dies were shipped to China in 1932, but were never used.

The design of the new national coin was not determined until 1933, when the Ministry of Finance issued Regulations on the State Currency of the Republic of China. Produced by the Shanghai Mint, the obverse carries a profile of Dr. Sun, and the reverse shows a junk (a Chinese flat-bottomed ship with battened sail) at sea. The characters "Yi" and "Yuen" ("one dollar") are inscribed on either side of the vessel.

The Junk dollar soon became popular. Together with the Yuan's Head, it first replaced the Dragon dollar and foreign silver coins. Later it supplanted the Yuan's Head along with other Dr. Sun commemoratives.

The coin also reveals the experience of the Chinese people in modern times: China's hope lies in its joining the rest of the world and its subsequent awakening. •

Qian Cao holds a master's degree in history, a subject he has taught at the college level. Presently editor of COIN MARKET, a monthly magazine in Chinese published by CTB Trading Company, he is a member of the American Numismatic Society.

In 1905 President Theodore Roosevelt asked noted sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens, to redesign our nation's coinage based on high relief designs of the ancient Greeks. Saint-Gaudens created what many consider the most beautiful and artistic coin in the history of U.S. coinage—the 1907, Roman Numerals, high relief $20.00 gold.

The coinage of the ancient Greeks that inspired Saint-Gaudens, as well as the subsequent coinage of the Roman and Byzantine empires comprise one of the most popular collecting pastimes known throughout the world.

Collecting this classical coinage is both affordable and educational. Classical Numismatic Group is in its 16th year of serving the collector in this fascinating field. If you, like Roosevelt and Saint-Gaudens, are inspired by ancient coinage, then let us introduce you to its pleasures with our fully illustrated and detailed catalogues.

The Drinks Are on Me

THIS INSTALLMENT OF "No Worse for Wear" will be my final column for The Numismatist. It was my own choice to conclude the series, a decision made for a number of reasons. Among these is simply the urge to move on, to do something new. This is a luxury we enjoy within our hobbies, one that compensates us for the often more restrictive environment of our careers. Another reason for stopping at this time is to preserve the freshness of the series. The time would soon arrive when I would be compelled to repeat topics, for even the vast subject of United States coinage is not limitless.

This thought troubled me, as I had entered into this project with a level of enthusiasm and anticipation that could never be recalled the second time around. While the product of such circumstances might still be serviceable to the reader, I would not be deceived. It's difficult to give up a column that has been a part of my identity for five years, yet I do so in the hope that this experience has been as enjoyable for readers as it has been for me.

I've attempted throughout this series to impart a sense of the pure joy to be found in collecting U.S. coins. Please indulge me while I recall the opening words of my first column, published in the February 1988 issue (p. 289):

Collecting United States coinage is fun, or at least it can be. That's the premise I will be using as I examine the American numismatic scene. The emphasis will be on the pleasurable aspects of collecting. The investment angle so prevalent in today's hobby/industry is already well-covered in other publications and will not be explored here, except when truly relevant.

columns will include coin preservation and storage, the various means of acquiring coins for one's collection, and the potential advantages of belonging to a local coin club or specialty organization. These topics will be interspersed with examinations of particular series of U.S. coins from a collector's perspective. Although it's nice to recall all the collecting opportunities of the past, this column will focus on the here and now, and how the collector of today can still participate in this wonderful hobby.

With a clear conscience, I report all of the things promised were delivered.

This column's original title was "Back to Basics," a label chosen hastily and one I soon began to dislike. To me it sounded preachy and dogmatic. While this oversight was eventually corrected, one lasting irony is that people still refer to my column by its old title. I don't seem to have shaken that legacy. Such was its hold that the Numismatic Literary Guild repeated the mistake in 1990 when honoring my column with an award.

It's interesting to note how much the coin scene has changed in the five years since I wrote the above introduction. In 1988 the most exciting aspect for the investment community was the anticipated entry of Wall Street money on a large scale. ANA anniversary conventions in 1988 and 1989 were scenes of unfettered optimism and prosperity. Everything seemed to be sealed in plastic at the time, and those seeking "raw," circulated coins may have felt rather lonely, at least when seeking U.S. material.

Through all of this excitement, most collectors were overwhelmed and left staring in dismay. Although not quite as insane as the coin market of 1979-80, when items were traded so quickly that dealers scarcely bothered to grade them, the numismatic scene in 1988 was worlds apart from the typical 1992 bourse floor.

In this runaway market, I attempted to reach the more typical coin collectors, those who were seeking to complete sets in circulated grades. To some, the pursuit of anything grading less than MS-64 seemed like heresy, and most of the media coverage of numismatics reinforced this prejudice. Even so, a 1987 survey of ANA members revealed that most were not caught up in the investment hype and had joined the Association in the hope of being educated and entertained on the subject of U.S. coins.

This was an encouraging sign, one that recurs throughout the Association's history and bodes well for the future of the hobby. In an effort to meet the needs of the members, I was asked by Editor Barbara Gregory to devise a column that addressed the basic issues of collecting American coins. It was to be a nuts-and-bolts, meat-and-potatoes exploration. For this opportunity, I will always be grateful. Now that collectors are once again in the spotlight and their needs are being met from many quarters, this column's goals have been satisfied.

One concern now voiced by hobby leaders is the recent decline in ANA membership. My friends, are we so short of memory that we don't recall previous dropoffs that followed in the wake of every market shake-up? A good percentage of the applications received in 1987-90 were from new dealers and investors who were interested only in the implied credibility of ANA membership. When prices collapsed, these overnight numismatists abandoned their commitment to the hobby.

While the Association may have benefited from their dues money, it did not in any way benefit from their membership. It is my belief that those who are destined to be members of the ANA will, with a little encouragement from us, ultimately discover the Association and commit to it for the duration of their interest in the hobby. Such memberships should be cultivated, while those of persons who seek only to exploit their membership for personal gain can be dismissed without regret.

In 1992, and in the new year to come, the scene is quite different from what it was not so long ago. "Plastic" coins, although still quite evident, are in decline; Wall Street money proved to be a pipe dream; and most investors were caught dancing when the music stopped. Many claim the coin market is dead, but this is false. The coin market is alive and well for those with inventories that satisfy real collectors; only the investment market is dead.

The irony is that now is the best time ever to invest in coins while prices are low. Collectors know this, but investors are nowhere to be found. Don't be fooled, however; they'll be back. Every few years, the cycle repeats itself in one form or another and has done so since the 1940s. Whether concentrated in one area of the hobby, such as BU rolls or proof sets, or covering the spectrum of federal coinage, the "investors in/investors out" cycle will be replayed again and again while collectors observe the dramatics with amused detachment.

Although my column concludes this month, I plan to continue writing for the hobby. My first book, The Complete Guide to Buffalo Nickels, has just been released. Excerpts appeared as the October 1992 and November 1992 installments of "No Worse for Wear" (pp. 1264 and 1565). In addition to planning future book projects, I will continue to write for The Journal of the Pacific Coast Numismatic Society.

In the meantime, I'll see you during the next "dead" market. The drinks will be on me!

New Van Allen/Mallis Book Reviewed

LISTS ARE POPULAR. In fact, a volume titled The Book of Lists was a best-seller a few years ago. What are the nicest towns to live in? What are the hottest stocks? What are the best films? You name it, and someone probably has compiled a list to include it.

Once in a while someone asks me what books I recommend, and often I respond by giving them a list of five or ten favorites. In the future any such list will definitely include a brand-new version of a classic text, the just-released Comprehensive Catalog and Encyclopedia of Morgan and Peace Dollars by Leroy C. Van Allen and A. George Mallis. The new third edition, available in softcover and hardbound versions from numismatic booksellers, is a vast updating of a reference book that has been out of print for more than a decade. Ample testimony to the success of its predecessors is the fact that more than 20,000 hardbound copies were sold.

More than anything else, the book is a detailed and very fascinating tour through the history of silver dollars, from the first Morgan dollar minted in 1878 to the last regular Peace dollar issued in 1935. Every die variety of Morgan dollar known to the authors is described in detail, and many are illustrated with superb photography.

The authors describe some 230 die varieties for the 1878 Philadelphia Mint dollar! This is important to anyone who owns even a single 1878 dollar, for some of these varieties are rare. The owner of this book has the definite possibility of striking a bonanza. For example, fewer than thirty 1878 dollars are known of die variety VAM-200, "VAM" being popular shorthand for "Van Allen and Mallis."

Just about anyone who has ever owned more than a handful of Morgan dollars is bound to have an example of the 1881-S, one of the most plentiful varieties in mint state. Fifty-one different 1881-S varieties are described, some common, others scarce. Among the other Morgan dollars described, some varieties are especially intriguing. I found it fascinating to read about an 1884 Philadelphia Mint dollar that has a tiny dot next to the designer's initial, "M," on the obverse and reverse. This dot appears in two sizes. "These dots were to identify working dies when the date was made smaller in 1884," the authors say.

Listed as VAM-3 (large dot) and VAM-4 (small dot), these are fairly scarce. It is my guess that most 1884 dollars in collections today have never been checked for this feature. I find this one of the most curious silver dollars of any variety ever made at the Philadelphia Mint. The beauty of it is, there's a good chance you can find one without paying a premium.

Market fluctuations, the General Services Administration sales of the 1970s and '80s, and other factors affecting availability and price of Morgan and Peace dollars are explored in interesting detail. As if that weren't enough, the volume contains the most scholarly presentation of the minting process—from raw metal to finished coins—appearing in print in any current numismatic book.

The new Van Allen-Mallis reference could not have been launched at a better time. Today, Morgan and Peace dollars, especially in lower grades, are cheaper than they have been in several years. When I saw my first copy of this book, I thought, "Why not suggest that this volume plus five or ten different dates of Morgan dollars in, say, MS-63 be packaged as an introduction to coin collecting?" The more I thought about it, the more I felt that anyone not familiar with the Morgan dollar series, or 19th-century numismatics for that matter, would get a great deal of enjoyment out of this, and at a cost of less than a couple hundred dollars. Ideally, the Morgan dollars should not be identified beforehand so the recipient could have some fun when the package arrives.

The new Comprehensive Catalog and Encyclopedia of Morgan and Peace Dollars by Leroy C. Van Allen and A. George Mallis offers a detailed look at the history of silver dollars.

A tiny dot appears next to the designer's initial on an 1884 Philadelphia Mint dollar, perhaps to identify the change to smaller digits in the date.

Mint errors in Morgan silver dollars are quite rare. Shown here is an off-center 1880-S. A section of the Van Allen/Mallis book is devoted to mint errors and how they are made.

The authors are old hands at the silver dollar game. Leroy C. Van Allen began collecting silver dollars in 1962 during the great Treasury release, and in 1965 he published a book about die varieties. Obviously, he must have spent every waking hour studying the subject! A. George Mallis started collecting in 1928, when as a lad he inherited some foreign coins from an uncle. Years later he turned to silver dollars, and by 1964 had examined more than 33,000 specimens and published a listing of die varieties. It was only natural that he should collaborate with Van Allen, and the union occurred in 1966.

Today, the numismatic world is richer for these two gentlemen and the excellent work they have done, now culminated in the third edition of this magnificent book. •

Holiday Greetings from American Bank Note

IN KEEPING WITH the season, it was suggested that I take a look at a group of holiday greeting cards made available a few years ago by American Bank Note Commemoratives. Although I have often contemplated these cards as I addressed them to friends, this time I studied them more closely and noticed something I had overlooked.

Two of the subjects in this six-card group originally were intended for and used on bank notes, discussed in "St. Nick Notes," an article I wrote for the December 1989 issue of The Numismatist (p. 1934). These two cards carry images of Santa Claus and his reindeer; the remaining four subjects probably were not intended for bank notes.

Before and for a time after the camera was invented, newspapers, magazines and books were illustrated by wood or copper engravings. In addition to their primary function as security printers, bank note companies prepared engraved subjects for the commercial community, as well as customized work for individuals, which included calendars, invitations, announcements, diplomas, awards, labels, and other items too numerous to list here. A considerable number of these were offered in group lots when Christie's auctioned the archives of American Bank Note Company (ABNCo) in 1990 and 1991.

The tremendous number of dies, rolls and plates in the vaults of ABNCo, now owned by United States Bank Note Corporation, were accumulated through the merger of the seven companies that formed ABNCo in 1858. Unfortunately, the records that would have identified the engravers of these thousands of pre-ABNCo dies and plates have not survived.

On two of the holiday greeting cards is an engraved credit to Baldwin & Gleason Company. It appears at the bottom of the engraving in extremely small letters. Baldwin & Gleason, not mentioned in ABNCo's definitive history, The Story of American Bank Note Company, was established in 1880 by engraver Marcus W. Baldwin (1853-1925) and designer Thomas Gleason (c. 1850-?). Both were employed at ABNCo at the time of the company's formation; however, Gleason resigned to devote all his time to the new venture. Baldwin remained with ABNCo and apparently was permitted to carry on his outside partnership.

After Baldwin was hired by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in 1897, Baldwin & Gleason Company continued in business for a while, but only as engravers of stationery. We can only assume that Baldwin & Gleason's dies, rolls and plates were sold to ABNCo.

Greeting card No. 103 of the holiday series shows a little girl warming her hands in a large muff, and indicates the design was copyrighted in 1886. It's a challenge to figure out who might have engraved this unattributed vignette. Marcus W. Baldwin is the obvious guess, but there are two other possibilities: F. Louis Siebert and Robert Savage, both of whom worked for Baldwin & Gleason Company in 1886.

Card No. 104 depicts a horse-driven coach as it passes a 7-mile marker on the way to New York. Attached to the side of the coach is a cylindrical container. On its lid are the letters "AS" or "VS," depending on how you view it (although I think it is the former). These initials do not represent any designer or engraver who worked for Baldwin & Gleason Company, the credit line that appears on this engraving that likely was produced between 1880 and 1892. Alfred Sealey immediately comes to mind, but he died in 1868. The only other engraver with these initials is Amando Sazio, who was engraving at ABNCo as late as

This holiday greeting, copyrighted by Baldwin & Gleason Company in 1886, likely was sold to American Bank Note Company when Baldwin & Gleason closed up shop.

1920. Could he be the one?

Perhaps the initials are those of the engraver's spouse or one of his children. With this mind, the engraver could have been Siebert or Savage.

The third card to be mentioned here, No. 101, portrays a little girl on ice skates. There is no indication as to who might have engraved this lovely image. It's too large and probably inappropriate for a bank note.

The fourth and last card, No. 102, shows two little girls coasting downhill on a 19th-century-style sled. It was only after I examined this card for the purpose of this column that I noticed two overlapping letters, "PD," to the left of one girl's shoulder. These initials could represent Paul Dixon, a designer who was employed at ABNCo in the 1880s. Perhaps this subject was engraved at ABNCo and intended for a calendar. Or, it could have been created specifically for a wealthy New Yorker of the period.

Hidden in this delightful vignette of two girls on a speeding sled are the initials "PD," perhaps indicating the work of ABNCo engraver Paul Dixon.

A few words about initials in engravings should be mentioned here. For more than 100 years, American engravers have tried—some successfully—to hide their initials in their engravings, as their employers forbade them to sign their work.

The cards discussed here are an anachronism. In the 19th century, when these subjects were engraved, greeting cards did not enjoy the popularity they do today. And, if they had, most people would have been unable to purchase such expensive cards. In the late 1980s, when the simplest greeting card cost $1, these lovely cards produced by American Bank Note Commemoratives were a real bargain at half the cost. •

Paddington Station

NEVER HESITATE ON a spur-of-the-moment impulse. What could have been done may haunt far longer than the regret of a hasty decision. I find it hard to shake the look in the eyes of the middle-aged beggar who stood so forlornly on the first landing of the entrance to Paddington Station Underground.

The first time I noticed him, I was guilty of staring. He looked so out of character. His dress seemed to indicate that he had been a successful businessman, now very much down on his luck. He was the picture of a gentleman—dressed in a worsted, pinstripe suit—well tailored, but a bit rumpled. He was bearded and in need of grooming, but no more disheveled than many numismatists I have known. He was “on the beg,” but never asked for money, his eyes dimmed in the embarrassment of his predicament. He held his cup, a paper one, close to his chest.

The first time I saw him, he looked down and turned his cup over. I mistook him for a person who was waiting for someone else and had misinterpreted my glance. But, he was there every morning when I caught either a Bakerloo or Circle Line train out of Paddington Station to points in downtown London. And, he was still there on my returns to the hotel each evening. I promised myself that on my last day I would give him any change I had left. I am sorry now that I did not give him something every day.

tory of pocket change totals 8 pounds 40. I could well brighten his otherwise dismal day. In England today, the smallest bill in circulation is the £5 note. At my rule-of-thumb exchange rate, the bill approximates $10 U.S. Currently, there are only three denominations of paper money—£5, £10 and £20. If one does not take care to spend change as it is received, one soon finds his pockets bulging from the excessive weight of English coins.

Coin sizes bear little relationship to value. First, there is the £1 coin referred to during its introductory period a few years ago as the Maggie Thatcher: "brassy, thick around the middle and thought itself to be a sovereign!" Although issued, £2 coins are seldom seen. Then, in descending value, the seven-sided, silver-dollar-sized 50 pence prevails. The 20-pence, no larger than our nickel, follows.

Three different coins circulate simultaneously as 10-pence pieces. Old half-dollar-sized, 2-shilling pieces, dating back as far as George VI, circulate alongside 10-pence coins of the same size and the new, quarter-sized 10 pence released into trade on October 1. Despite what appears to be obvious, English vending machines have no problem with accepting these coins.

The 5-pence piece is not much larger than our dime. And lastly, there are 2- and 1-pence copper pieces to be received in change. The former is about the size of a quarter, and its half-sister is the same as a U.S. cent. These coppers are scheduled for a change in composition in 1993. Intrinsically, the cost of manufacture now exceeds their face value. Like our own cents, British coppers will be wearing makeup next year—except theirs will be copper-plate on steel.

Getting back to my London experience . . . My little hoard of pocket change is set aside. Although not scheduled to depart until evening, I'll not be taking the subway this morning, but will, instead, go over to Paddington Station. The agenda calls for participation in the opening of the 22nd Annual European Congress of the International Bank Note Society (IBNS). Ceremonies are scheduled for 9:30 a.m., Saturday, October 10. The bourse is set for the Great Western Hotel—at Paddington Station.

It is now 9:20 a.m. I am closing the last suitcase. Later in the day, we will take the Airbus from the front of our hotel to Heathrow. From our hotel, Paddington is in the next block, a three-minute walk at the longest.

Kraboom!!!

The sound is unmistakable. An explosion shakes our hotel. A quick look out our fourth-floor window shows no signs of panic, but everyone is looking toward Paddington Station. There are no sirens, no ambulance sounding klaxon horns. It was as if the explosion was expected. The Irish Republican Army (IRA) has been extremely active for the past four days—three explosions the night before, two car bombs and a modest number of injuries (none too serious) the day before that. It certainly is not the blitz, but war has returned to the streets of London.

By the time I reach our lobby, police have cordoned off all accesses to Paddington. Klaxon horns now begin to sound. The area around our hotel starts to fill as people are evacuated from the subway and the Great Western Hotel. Not only do guests—sans luggage—file out, but also dealers and collectors waiting for the show to open.

Fortunately, the IRA follows its long-standing practice of forewarning, although it never pinpoints the location of the explosives. The device, I soon learn, was wrapped in Christmas paper and placed in a phone booth near an entrance to the station. One man is injured.

The October meeting of the IBNS at London's Victory Services Club—near Marble Arch—on the Thursday preceding the Society's annual congress previewed what the forthcoming weekend's bourse was supposed to have been.

Paddington Station, it turns out, is a prime target. Here is located the police station where IRA suspects are routinely taken for questioning. Rumors circulate that a second bomb may be hidden near the blast-proof police station, more as a taunt than a desire to cause damage. The police will not speculate when the station will reopen or when people will be allowed to return to the convention. There's little to do but wait or take a walk.

It is now that I recall the indomitable spirit of the British. We should not have been surprised when we found some taking advantage of the park benches in nearby Norfolk Square to buy, sell or trade their numismatic wares, nor when we passed a shaded carpark and saw someone hold a bill to the light to examine its watermark.

Alternate arrangements are made to get us to Heathrow, and it is not until we go through security that I realize that I still have that hoard of coins in my pocket! Eight pounds forty may not have bought the anonymous beggar a scrumptious meal, but it would have fed him for a few days, even at London prices. I wish I hadn't hesitated when I first saw him, and now guilt is coupled with wondering if he was that statistic—one injured. •

Great Bargains for Holiday Gift-Giving

HOW WOULD YOU like to buy a single videotape that will tell you everything you need to know about grading coins and keep you up to date on all the latest developments, changes and techniques—all for only $39.95? Sounds almost too good to be true, doesn't it?

Imagine spending a few hours learning from a video program, and then being able to grade coins successfully. Just think of it! No more problems with overgraded coins, and you too can successfully grade with the experts. It sounded too good to me, so I thought I had better look into this one in depth.

The title of this alluring video program is Grading Mint-State U.S. Coins. This educational presentation featuring ANA Authenticator J.P. Martin is available directly from the ANA.

Does the video deliver all that it promises? You bet! It is just about the finest such program ever produced. I have to qualify that a bit, because I put one together some years ago myself. But aside from that, this is easily the greatest thing going today. It tells all, and in a way that is easy to understand and follow. If you ever plan to buy another coin, you need to see this video. It can pay for itself with your very next numismatic purchase.

Some old-timers (myself included) will be surprised to find new concepts and definitions that seem very different from when we learned to grade. Okay, so that's the way it is today. I may still prefer to grade according to my strict, old-fashioned "technical standards," but you can bet that I now understand about market grading and how important it is when buying coins in today's world.

The market grading techniques explained in this video are based on the standards used by major grading services. Basically, they are no different from any other standards, but they do call for interpretation of eye appeal and other subjective factors. All this is carefully and graphically explained by narrator J.P. Martin, who does a masterful job of demonstrating exactly how to determine grade.

This is one product that really is all it claims to be, and it's a terrific bargain.

If you want a nice souvenir of World War II, you now can buy a complete, 11-piece set of wartime nickels for only $4.95 plus postage. The set includes one coin from each U.S. mint for the years 1942 through 1945. For a couple dollars more you can get a special holder for them. Sorry, this ad did not state the condition of the coins other than that each was "average."

You also can buy a full set in Choice Uncirculated condition for only $45. Either way, you can hardly lose because these are truly historical keepsakes and a nice way to get someone interested in history and coin collecting.

If these offers sound like legitimate bargains to you, it's because they are. These are listings from full-time dealers who advertise in national coin publications and sell nice coins at competitive prices. These dealers are just the opposite of con artists who offer similar sets to the general public at three or four times these prices. Coins like these make great presents for the holidays. Take advantage of such bargains by searching the ads in your favorite numismatic publication.

Uncirculated silver dollars are available at less than $10 each. Wow, this sounds like another come-on at prices too-good-to-be-true. I actually found more than 10 such offerings in various current coin publications. Are they just another scam? Heck no. That is where the market is today.

At these new price levels, the old standby Morgan and Peace dollars are beginning to look like terrific bargains. If these same coins were worth buying at $30 to $50 a few years ago, they must be even a better deal at current prices. And these are not just scam offerings. You really can find such deals if you shop the coin papers. How about giving a few silver dollars to friends for Christmas? You might start them on a new collecting adventure.

The Treasury Department recently announced the minting of a special commemorative medal honoring the Bicentennial of the United States Mint. The medal, which was made at the Mint, bears a rendition of Dunsmore's Inspecting the First Coins on its obverse. On the reverse is a collage of past and current U.S. coins.

These attractive medals come in two sizes. The 3-inch version is priced at $21 and the 1½-inch piece at $2.25. Both are made of bronze. Here again, this sounds like a bargain when compared to some of the sleazy medals that promoters are selling at higher prices.

As for the government medals, I am sure you will find them to be well made from artistic dies. The price is right, and they are not being promoted as rare or valuable heirlooms. Despite what I may have written about them in past columns, they are nice art medals that anyone would be happy to own. It is a shame they came so late in the year and were not offered on a wider basis to the general public. I think they could have created new interest in coin collecting if handled differently.

File #322

Speaking of commemorative coins, it looks as if we are in for a flock of them in the near future. I was beginning to wonder if we would get the Columbus pieces before the end of the year. It's always nice to have a coin during the actual year of the event being celebrated. After all, that is the main reason behind such things.

If you like commemoratives, you will love the numerous issues that will be thrust upon us in the next few years. Thirty-two are being planned just to support the 1996 Olympic Games. You also will be able to buy pieces in 1993 to commemorate the anniversary of preservation of Civil War battlefields and the anniversary of World War II. Gosh, I was around in 1943 and remember that was neither the beginning nor the end of the war. Did someone forget to commemorate Pearl Harbor in 1991, or are we celebrating the end of the war early?

Why not commemorate events on sensible anniversary dates to help new generations remember history? Coins have long taught collectors about history and geography. It would be a shame to change that now and make commemoratives just for the purpose of fund-raising.

Still, many attractive and meaningful U.S. commemoratives are available that make fine reminders of our nation's heritage. These would be a nice treat for a friend who might not find date and mint collecting of interest.

It is a fact that government-issued offerings of coins and sets of commemoratives go up in price each year. That is because of demand for the new issues, manufacturing costs and surcharges. Yes, it does seem the government is charging all that traffic will bear, but if you wait a bit, the same coins often are available from dealers at a discount. Try shopping for some of these bargains. You may learn to enjoy collecting all over again. •

RED LABEL FOR "PROBLEM" COINS

PROBLEM COIN CERTIFIED CAPSULE

DATELINE: Chattanooga, TN
JULY 1992

Beginning Today: When you submit coins...every one of them will be graded and encapsulated. Never before has any grading service offered such extensive attention to your coins. Coins without any problems will continue to be graded and holdered with the premium "old-familiar" GREEN INSERT LABEL. Coins with problems will now be graded and holdered with the new certified RED INSERT LABEL. These will be graded with the problem described and printed below the grade. Collectors and dealers can now get their coins graded, certified and slabbed even if the coin has a problem.

You make the choice between other grading services and PCI. And when you do please consider the following reasons that make the difference:

- (1). PCI only charges $7.50 per coin (plus postage, etc.) to grade, authenticate, encapsulate and to process your order regardless of its value. Compare this to $26 or $22 or even $12!

- (2). More collectors, dealers, individuals and banks (over 4100 total) have submitted coins to PCI than any other grading service. We challenge any grading service to match our record beginning the day we opened on June 1, 1989 until now!
- (3). Our standard express "turn-around" time from the day we receive your coins to the day we ship them out is 6 working days. At all of the other services this will cost you a minimum of $23! Our price is $7.50.
- (4). Anyone may submit coins to PCI at the same low rates. The 2 other major grading services have formed exclusive dealer networks...thereby restricting who may get coins graded. Why do you think they charge so much? It's obviously money in the dealers pocket not yours! No longer do you have to go through an "in-crowd" to get consistently graded coins. It's your private business!

- (5). Every genuine dated coin you now submit (except plugged, holed, altered or undistinguishable) will be encapsulated in either the GREEN LABEL or RED LABEL slab. Collectors know that coins in slabs are generally worth more and now you can get in on the profits. PCI does reserve the right to refuse to encapsulate any coin for any reason it feels would be detrimental to the numismatic industry.
- (6). Any purchaser or submitter of a PCI coin who believes their coin(s) is misgraded, improperly attributed, or has questionable authenticity may resubmit the slab for a re-evaluation and/or reslabbing. The resubmitted process of evaluation and/or reselling will be paid for by PCI (excluding return postage and insurance which you pay).

6 DAY EXPRESS SERVICE SLAB SUBMITTAL FORM

Coins will be shipped on or before the 6th working day after we receive them and will be sent U.S. Registered Mail.

If the will indicates that the property is bequeathed to specific persons and/or organizations, then typically the only legal issue remaining is one of valuation for tax purposes. If there is no will, one or more of the heirs (that is, the relatives who stand to inherit the property under state intestacy law) may wish to receive the numismatic property as part of a general distribution.

In the latter case, the value of each item may become a significant factor in the distribution, but a conscientious administrator will attempt to settle these issues with the heirs. If a settlement is reached, a simple contract recording what was agreed will suffice; if not, it probably will be necessary to liquidate the property.

Unless the market for this numismatic material is high (or volatile, reaching sporadic high points), the sale of the items should be deferred. Most states provide that the executor or administrator need not make any distributions to the legatees of a will or to the heirs of an intestate estate for a certain period of time. (In New York that period is seven months.)

This provision gives creditors time to learn of the death and assert any claims they might have against the deceased. If such claims are made to the executor or administrator, they must be paid, along with other known debts and administrative expenses (such as taxes) before any distributions can be made. In fact, custom and practice dictate that the time period for making distributions to legatees and heirs may be considerably longer than the prescribed period. If a collection is sold before then, the proceeds are held for the same time period, first as a fund for creditors and later for distribution to heirs.

A waiting period may provide enough time to consign and sell the items at a numismatic auction, such as those conducted in conjunction with the ANA's anniversary and early spring conventions. It may also be possible to consign the items through a dealer for sale at a regional or national coin show.

The expedience of liquidation should never be given priority over selection of the method of sale, especially when that method is something other than public auction. Generally, the auction route is preferable because it is thought to provide the greatest assurance that current market prices will be obtained and that unfair advantage will not be taken of the consignors' ignorance of numismatics. The larger the auction, the greater the exposure of the items to the numismatic market, and thus the greater the likelihood that the items will command fair prices.

Assessing Value

THE MAIN QUESTION that arises in the sale of a deceased's numismatic property involves the need to obtain a formal appraisal, regardless of whether the property is to be distributed or liquidated. Often it is advisable to wait before obtaining an appraisal, as it can be expensive and require some time for completion. Ultimately, an appraisal may not be necessary.

In the case of a relatively small estate, or even a large estate involving numismatic items of relatively small value, an appraisal may not be required. In essence, it is up to the taxing authorities—the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) if the estate is large (more than $600,000) and therefore subject to federal estate taxation, and the state taxing authority if the state imposes taxes on property passing in an estate.

Of course, the heirs—and, more significantly, the lawyer handling the estate—may be totally in the dark about the value of the numismatic items, and therefore unable to decide if a formal appraisal is required. Under such circumstances, most community-minded coin dealers are willing to give off-hand, verbal opinions about the approximate value of the items, giving the family or executor the information they need to decide whether to obtain a formal appraisal or wait for a specific request for one from the state taxing authority.

A Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book") by R.S. Yeoman and the Standard Catalog of United States Paper Money by Chester L. Krause and Robert F. Lemke always provide some help in fixing approximate values, even though the family or the estate lawyer are likely to be totally helpless when it comes to assigning the correct condition or grade to the items and may even have trouble attributing them to the catalog listings. The estate will be served best if a knowledgeable collector or dealer is enlisted for this preliminary step.

YNs Get Bountiful Advice in Brewster

Young numismatists attending the Cross States Numismatic Association Coin, Stamp, Jewelry and Baseball Card Show in Brewster, New York, this past September got plenty of good advice from Larry Gentile Sr.

Gentile conducted a Young Numismatist Program that covered lots of ground. He highly recommended that young collectors keep a copy of A Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book") handy and educate themselves in every way possible before purchasing coins for the first time.

In addition, Gentile offered some fascinating facts about paper money, water marks, and "Vampire" notes and other foreign currency. The YNs also participated in two auctions, and as 13-year-old attendee Andrew Lavitt reports, "Everyone had a great time."

1993 Young Numismatist Awards Program

If you are an ANA member 17 years of age or younger, you are eligible to compete for special ANA awards in 12 exhibiting and writing categories. The winners' names will be announced and awards presented at the ANA's 102nd Anniversary Convention in Baltimore, Maryland, next summer. These awards are sponsored by the ANA, affiliated organizations, and individuals interested in encouraging youngsters to participate in numismatics.

YN Literary Awards

The first-place winner in each category will win an engraved plaque; second- and third-place winners will receive a framed certificate. Articles submitted to the competition may be of any length, but

- 1) all work must be original,
- 2) only one article can be submitted in each category, and
- 3) a single article cannot be entered in more than one category.

The author must be an ANA junior member (17 years of age or younger) at the time his or her article is entered in the competition.

Abe Kosoff Memorial Literary Award. This award will be presented to the young numismatist who writes the best essay or gives the best talk on a numismatic subject.

Gould Memorial Literary Award. This award will be given to the junior author of the best published or unpublished article submitted in this category. The article must show that the author conducted in-depth research in his or her area of interest, going beyond information published in standard reference works, and must demonstrate the author's individual or specialized involvement

Stanton Named ANA Outstanding Adult Advisor

For his dedication to introducing young collectors to the hobby, J.T. Stanton of Savannah, Georgia, was named Outstanding Adult Advisor for 1992. An avid coin collector since 1959 and a specialist in error coins and die varieties, Stanton, with friend Bill Fivaz, sponsored three scholarships for young numismatists to the ANA Summer Conference.

with the topic. The article may or may not have been submitted to a local or regional publication in competition or for publication.

Ray Byrne Memorial Literary Award. This award will be presented to the junior author of the best published article submitted in this category. Qualifications are the same as for the Gould award, except that the article must have been published in The Numismatist, First Strike or other recognized numismatic publication.

Those interested in competing for the ANA YN literary awards can obtain more information by writing to the ANA Educational Services Department, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279. All entries for the YN literary awards must be received by April 15, 1993.

YN Exhibit Awards

First-, second- and third-place exhibit awards will be available in each of the seven numismatic categories listed below. Exhibits will be judged in accordance with the ANA's official exhibit rules—the same standards that apply to adult exhibitors. YN exhibitors must be 17 years of age or younger at the time the exhibit is entered. They also must prepare, mount and place their own exhibits. Each winner will receive a wooden plaque engraved with their name, exhibit category and standing.

Those junior members who wish to compete for exhibit awards at the ANA's 102nd Anniversary Convention in Baltimore can obtain additional information and a copy of the exhibit rules from the ANA Educational Services Department.

Gordon Z. Greene Memorial Award—U.S. coins

James L. Betton Award—foreign coins

Kurt Krueger Exhibit Award—U.S. & foreign paper money

Melissa Van Grover Exhibit Award—Israeli or Judaic numismatics

ANA-Sponsored Exhibit Award—medals and tokens of all countries

Charles H. Wolfe Sr. Exhibit Award—medieval and ancient numismatics

ANA Member Clubs Award to the Outstanding Young Numismatist

The recipient of this prestigious award is presented with a special wooden plaque and an all-expense-paid scholarship to the following year's ANA Summer Conference in Colorado Springs, Colorado.

The Outstanding Young Numismatist is selected on the basis of the individual's service to numismatics or educational groups, published papers (including those printed in local publications), enthusiasm for the hobby, and leadership in local numismatics. Nominations can be made by any ANA member or member club and should be received by the ANA Educational Services Department, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279 by April 15, 1993.

Young Author Signs Books at ANA Show

No. GB35.W4). Wescott helped organize the American Nickel Collectors Association and edits its journal, NICKEL NEWS.*

Junior Collectors Take Home Exhibit and Literary Awards

Topping the list of ANA young numismatist exhibit and literary award winners announced at this year's convention in Orlando were John Kraljevich Jr. of Pottstown, Pennsylvania, and Matthew V. Rockman of San Francisco, California. Kraljevich was presented the Charles H. Wolfe Junior Best-of-Show Award for his exhibit, "A Complete Set of Varieties from the Randall Hoard." In addition to four first-place exhibit awards and two first-place literary awards, Rockman was named the ANA Outstanding Young Numismatist for 1992.

Teenager Developed a Love for Coins

James S. Dutch, an ANA life member, introduced his stepson Jason May to numismatics in 1991 by taking him to a local coin show. From that point on, Jason was an avid collector. At his first major convention, Dutch says Jason's eyes were "filled with wonderment as he beheld for the first time a world he never knew existed. His questions could have filled a book."

Certainly many YNs have experienced that same rush of excitement and awe. That feeling prompted Jason to begin his own numismatic collection that he continued to build until his untimely death in September 1992 at age 16. Jason's varied collection included 59 pieces of domestic and foreign origin, among them a proof set from 1976, the year he was born. Jason loved numismatics and researched each piece in his collection thoroughly. Collecting can deeply enrich any numismatist's life, as it certainly did Jason May's. ■

Philadelphia, December 16, 1876

My Dear Great-Granddaughter Jennie,

With this letter, I give to you my prized collection of coins, tokens, medals and paper money. It took me many years to form this collection, beginning when I was a youngster about your age. It includes pieces from around the world and from different times of history. Let me tell you about a few of my favorites; they may show you why I think collecting coins is the most fascinating hobby you can choose.

The first is a coin in an envelope marked "Ancient Greece, Syracuse, silver dekadrachm, 5th century B.C." This is the oldest coin in the collection. Hold it carefully by its edges and look at it through a magnifying glass. It is in wonderful condition, and the design shows the amazing skill of the artist who engraved it.

The people of ancient Greece created some of the finest examples of art on coins ever produced. And the beauty of the coins made by the Greeks of Syracuse has never been equaled. On the obverse (front) you see Arethusa, from Greek mythology; her face and hair are beautifully engraved. The reverse (back) shows a chariot pulled by four horses. See how the horses gallop, thundering toward the edge of the coin? They almost seem to move. This coin is not just a piece of money; it is a fine work of art.

This silver dekadrachm of Syracuse is a fine work of art. The horses seem to gallop across the coin.

Looking at this George Washington medal, you can understand how great a loss Americans felt at his death.

Next look at the medal marked simply "Medal #1," the first medal I bought. I got it when it was new, in 1800, and I have handled it very gently over the years. Although this gold medal is very lovely, it is special to me because it was made shortly after the death of a great American hero. Around the portrait on the obverse are the words HE IS IN GLORY, THE WORLD IN TEARS. He is George Washington, our first president. The medal tells about the great loss Americans felt at the time he died.

Next, I would like you to look at some coins that are called "circulated." This means they are worn, because people have used them. Look at the coin labeled "U.S. silver dollar, 1870 Carson City Branch Mint." Even though it has been used a lot, it is still pleasing to look at. I saved this as a souvenir of my train trip through Kansas last year. It was made in Carson City, Nevada, from gold and silver taken from the mines of the famous Comstock Lode.

Even though tokens like this one made during the Civil War were outlawed a dozen years ago, this one looks enough like a real Indian Head cent to have survived. If you look carefully, you'll see it says "NOT One Cent."

ANA MUSEUM

You have seen silver dollars like this with seated Liberty on the obverse and an eagle on the reverse. Look below the eagle and you will find the tiny letters "CC," which stand for Carson City. Here in the East, we seldom see the coins made at the mint in Carson City, but you can be sure that this silver dollar has seen a lot of use in the Wild West. How many cowboys have spent it, gambled it away, or carried it across the dusty plains on horseback? Was it ever stolen during a stagecoach holdup? It can tell many interesting tales.

Now look at another circulated coin, one in the envelope marked "China, A.D. 1280-94, Kublai Khan." This bronze coin is different from any you have seen before. It is called a "cash" coin. The Chinese made cash coins with a square hole in the center so people could carry them on a string. When I look at it, I think of the Chinese people who bought things with it 600 years ago. Then I remember that Marco Polo, the famous traveler from Italy, was actually in China at the time coins like this were used. I wonder if he handled this cash coin you are looking at right now. (You may have learned that Marco Polo wrote a book about his travels, a book that Christopher Columbus probably read before he sailed off in search of the lands it described.)

Now look at a piece of paper money, a slightly tattered $3 Continental Currency note of "The United Colonies," as the United States was once known. It was printed in 1776, during the Revolutionary War. The face (front) of the note shows two large birds fighting—one bird stands for America and the other Great Britain. Above the birds are the Latin words EXITUS IN DUBIO EST, meaning "the outcome is in doubt," showing that at the time the bill was printed we did not know who would win the war. This $3 bill was spent by Americans who took part in the struggle that would make us a free nation. There are very few things you could own that would mean more than this old piece of paper money.

The last piece I want to tell you about is an 1863 Civil War token made of copper and about the same size as a penny. During the Civil War there weren't enough coins to make change for people when they did their everyday shopping, so many businesses made tokens like this. The one I am giving you looks very much like a real Indian Head cent, doesn't it? But the Indian does not look as good as the one you see on a real cent. And instead of saying "One Cent," it says "Not One Cent." This is because the people who made it did not wish to be accused of counterfeiting (making fake money and trying to pass it as real). Millions of tokens similar to this were made during the Civil War.

Congress outlawed these tokens in 1864, but the one you now have looked enough like a real cent that it was used until today. I "arrested" this little metal "outlaw" only a few months ago when I found it "hiding out" in my pocket change. Think of all the people who might have used it—a doctor in Cincinnati, a bricklayer in New York City, a schoolgirl in New Orleans or a poet in Boston. For all we know, this token may have rested in the pocket of President Abraham Lincoln at Gettysburg. The copper in it is not worth even one cent, but it is priceless. It is something special. It is history.

The point I want you to understand is simple. Each piece in this collection—now your collection—is very special in its own way. Each and every coin, medal, token or bill, no matter what its value in dollars and cents, is a treasure beyond measure. Whether old or new, rare or common, each piece is valuable because it has a story to tell. It tells its tale only in soft whispers, so we must pay close attention.

Coin collecting is a kind of passport to mankind, leading us on a journey around the world and through history. It is an exciting journey of exploration, and you are the explorer. Start now and stay with it. You will be richly rewarded in many ways. And you will have fun, too.

With affection,

Lafayette McCord

This fictional letter illustrates the enjoyment of numismatics that author Curt Wood (ANA 150617) wants to pass along to the younger generation, just as "Lafayette McCord" intended when giving his beloved collection to his great-granddaughter.

Coinage of a Steadfast King

by Matt Rockman, J 139925

In one of history's most romantic acts, King Edward VIII abdicated the throne of Britain in 1936 to marry an American divorcee. Edward's brother, then Duke of York, became King George VI. Born December 14, 1895, George VI is only the fourth king in British history to succeed to the throne in his predecessor's lifetime. Despite his inauspicious accession, it was soon clear that the new king had inherited the same qualities that had distinguished his father, George V, and endeared him to the English public.

The abdication crisis was quickly overshadowed by World War II. George set an example for the English people during this tumultuous period. The king and queen succeeded in raising morale by visiting troops, munitions factories, docks and bomb-damaged areas. George even visited the troops at the front lines in North Africa and Italy. "It may truly be said that his courage under conditions which would have broken the spirit of most men carried the nation through its greatest trial," notes The Guide Book of Great Britain's Modern Coins. "In this he was blessed with a wife who stood behind him, and strong minded advisors, none of whom knew the meaning of giving up when the future may seem to have offered little chance of survival."

George VI died February 6, 1952, and was succeeded by his eldest daughter, who became Elizabeth II. The coinage produced in his 15-year reign bears witness to a nation at a turning point in its history.

George VI's coinage is comprised of three distinct types. The first, struck from his coronation in 1937 until 1946, carries all of his titles and is made of .500 fine silver. These pieces also were struck in bronze until 1948.

A thrift plant, particularly appropriate for a coin commonly used for saving purposes, graces the reverse of Great Britain's 12-sided, silver threepence, produced until 1946. ANA MUSEUM

The second issue, initiated in 1947, was struck in copper-nickel in sixpence through half crown, denominations previously struck in silver. The change was necessitated by an agreement Britain made with the United States during World War II. Known as the "Lend-Lease Arrangement," it required payment of large amounts of silver to lease U.S. ships, planes and other war materiel. The only way the payments could be made was to remove all silver coinage from circulation and replace it with base-metal pieces. This ended a 1,000-year, unbroken tradition of silver coinage in Britain.

The third issue (the second in copper and nickel-brass) began in 1949. As a result of India's hard-won independence and new constitution (signed in 1949), George VI could no longer claim to be "Emperor of India." The title "Indiae Imperator" (in its abbreviated forms), was removed from the coins struck as a part of this issue.

Since George died early in 1952, all the coins of that year were struck in the reign of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. A portrait of Queen Elizabeth replaced that of her father on coins struck in 1953.

George's coinage is really an adaptation of that prepared for his brother, Edward VIII. The uncrowned, right-facing effigy of Edward was designed by T. Humphrey Paget, an artist in the employ of the Royal Mint. Paget had been working on the royal portrait since 1935, and upon Edward's abdication set to work on the likeness of his successor. The initials "H.P." appear in tiny characters beneath the truncation of George's neck. On George's coinage, the head faces left, continuing the 300-year-old custom of successive English monarchs facing alternate directions on their coinage. This tradition was maintained according to The Proposed Coinage of Edward VIII "at the expense of the harmless fiction that if there had been any coins of Edward VIII they would have shown the King facing right."

The reverses of the bronze coins were all redesigned according to the wishes of Edward VIII, and the new designs were retained for the coinage of George VI. The farthing sports the tiny wren, one of England's smallest birds, appropriate for the coin of smallest value. The wren was designed by Wilson Parker and originally intended for the silver threepence. This uncluttered reverse was called by the London Times a "vividly naturalistic design," and remained on the farthing until its retirement in 1956.

The bronze farthing, the smallest denomination struck for George VI, features a tiny wren amidst an uncluttered reverse design. Its depiction on the bronze halfpenny was considered appropriate for a seafaring nation.

The halfpenny features Sir Francis Drake's 75-foot ship Golden Hind, the first English vessel to circumnavigate the globe. Designed by T. Humphrey Paget for the halfcrown, it was deemed fitting for a maritime nation and desirable for the halfpenny.

The seated Britannia, which had been the solitary image on bronze coinage for more than 300 years, was retained, but modified for the penny of George VI. The modified design, prepared by C.W. Coombes, a sculptor on the staff of the Royal Mint, includes a small lighthouse in the field, part of the original design, but absent for more than 40 years.

The threepence is perhaps the most interesting denomination of this coinage. Although introduction of the dodecagonal, nickel-brass piece and elimination of the silver threepence both occurred during the reign of George VI, each change was planned for the coinage of Edward VIII. The tiny silver piece encountered almost universal resistance because it was too small for convenience. It was decided in February 1936 to pursue a new coin that was "readily distinguishable from all other coins, not unreasonably large or small; technically suitable for mass production; and of a size that would not allow it to work automatic machines intended for coins of higher value."

As a round coin would not have been readily distinguishable, various odd shapes were examined. Trial pieces in the name of Edward VIII were produced, some square with rounded corners, others with 20 scallops. A 12-scalloped blank was more seriously considered, as was an octagonal shape.

Eventually, aesthetic demands prevailed and the 12-sided coin was selected. A yellow, nickel-brass alloy, equally dissimilar to both silver and bronze, was chosen. The small silver piece was produced until 1946, by which time the larger nickel-brass coins had gained acceptance.

The silver threepence features a "Saint George" cross centered on a rose and was designed by Kruger Gray, who also designed the coinage for the last 10 years of the reign of George V. The nickel-brass coin bears a design selected from a set of sketches submitted in June 1936 by Frances Madge Kitchener. The chosen motif, a thrift plant, was considered particularly appropriate for a coin commonly used for saving purposes. Kitchener's design was executed by Percy Metcalfe, an artist with extensive experience in modeling coin designs.

The sixpence displays the King's Imperial Cipher, GRI (Georgius Rex Imperator), as conceived by Kruger Gray. In 1949 India's independence necessitated altering the cipher, and the I in GRI was removed.

There are two distinct George VI shilling types. One bears the royal crest of England, the other the crest of Scotland. The idea to have two separate shillings began with the coins of Edward VIII, when it first became apparent that the Scottish people took offense at the predominantly English character of the coinage then in circulation. They particularly protested the use of the English crest on the shillings of George V.

As a result, in February 1936 it was determined that a distinctively Scottish shilling would be produced to circulate side by side with the English variety. Gray designed the shillings for Edward VIII, and, with the accession of George VI, the two designs were maintained as a special compliment to the Queen's Scottish ancestry.

Gray also created the reverse of Edward VIII's florin. The crowned rose with thistle and shamrock was only slightly modified to conform to George's titles.

A new halfcrown reverse also was designed for Edward VIII, but not chosen for the coinage of George VI. Instead, the halfcrown of George V appeared in a slightly modified form prepared by Kruger Gray. The old shield of arms, shown upright and ready for attack, was altered to show a loop at the top, indicating that the shield could now be hung upon the wall, no longer needed for defense. Unfortunately, World War II demonstrated the fallacy of this hope.

The 1937 crown was designed by Gray as a coronation commemorative for Edward VIII, but served instead to mark the coronation of George VI. The classic heraldic design, showing a lion and unicorn supporting the royal arms, incorporates the Norman-French motto "Dieu et mon droit," meaning "God and my right."

A massive exhibition in 1951, called the Festival of Britain, was held in London to mark the centennial of the great exhibition of 1851. A crown struck in 1951 commemorates not only that event, but also the 400th anniversary of the first English crown. This type incorporates the denomination in the obverse design. The reverse displays Benedetto Pistrucci's famous representation of Saint George slaying the dragon. This coin alone of George's coinage bears an inscription on the rim.

Retaining designs approved by Edward facilitated coinage redesign while George's wholehearted assumption of monarchical duties supported the nation during a time of international crisis. In these efforts George VI demonstrated his steadfast nature and resolve. ■

Active in the Association's YN program (he was named 1992 Outstanding YN), 17-year-old Matt Rockman was a member of the winning team in the ANA's World Series of Numismatics and has received numerous awards for his numismatic exhibits and articles. For this story, Matt received the 1992 Abe Kosoff Memorial Literary Award.

Collector Spotlight

Matthew V. Rockman's past is his prologue.

Only 17 years old, the young San Francisco collector has been studying coins for more than 6 years. In another year, he will take his knowledge of ancient coins to college, where he hopes to pursue studies in archaeology.

"My involvement in numismatics has really helped me out in school, especially history," Rockman says after a long day at Lowell High School. "It has helped give a face to the names and places you study. Numismatics has put me a step ahead of the others in my class."

A busy student who starts the day after 8 o'clock in the morning and doesn't get home until 6 o'clock in the evening, Rockman is editor-in-chief of his school newspaper, The Lowell; president of the Lowell Forensic Society; and an aspirant to one of several eastern liberal arts colleges. He has been a member of the California Scholarship Federation for three years, and an officer and award-winning recipient of local and state debating organizations.

Despite his hectic schedule, Rockman takes everything in stride, including coin collecting.

"I don't remember what got me started, but when I was 11 years old, I asked my parents to take me to a coin store," he says. "To this day, I don't remember why I wanted coins, but I have to say that my family has always been very supportive of my involvement in numismatics."

At the store, Rockman bought a bag of foreign coins for $5 and was off—sorting, classifying and studying them.

"I soon began collecting British coins of all types," Rockman says in his comfortable manner. "I never really specialized in them, but I went after them because I knew the language."

Matt Rockman: Back to the Future

by Stephen Bobbitt
ANA 143751

Never short on words, Rockman says he wrote a survey of British coinage for a 6th-grade term paper.

"I wrote too much," he says a bit chagrined, before admitting he is now a Royal Numismatic Society Fellow. Rockman also is a member of the ANA, which named him Outstanding Young Numismatist this year; the American Numismatic Society; the Young Numismatists of America, which he currently serves as a governor; and the Pacific Coast and San Francisco Numismatic Societies.

"I have made a lot friends through numismatics," he says. "They're good friends."

Rockman says his coin collecting interests have now turned to ancient coins, where he quickly became acquainted with most of the dealers of ancient coins he met at ANA shows.

"I mostly specialize in coins of the Roman Republic, especially the later period—the last couple of decades before the fall," he says with excitement. "I have a couple of very special pieces I will always treasure."

At the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando last August, Rockman won four first-place exhibit awards, including the Charles H. Wolfe Sr. Award for medieval and ancient material, the Melissa Van Grover Award for Israeli or Judaic material, the Kurt Krueger Award for U.S. and foreign paper money, and the James L. Betton Award for world coins. This last award comes from Rockman's numismatic beginnings; it was titled "Numismatic Illustrations of British History: 19th and 20th Centuries."

"I don't have any plans to be a dealer," Rockman says. "But I will probably continue to keep my hand in the hobby. I think I would miss it too much if I didn't." ■

Club Activities

ANA Membership Director Kim M. Dixon reports that three organizations recently joined the Association: Cayman Islands Currency Board, Government Administration Building, George Town, Grand Cayman, Cayman Islands; Colonial Coin Collectors Club, c/o M. Hodder, HC 69, Box 606, Wolfeboro, NH, 03894; and Metropolitan Art Association, 346 New York Avenue, Huntington, NY 11743. Welcome to the ANA!

The Bergen County Coin Club of New Jersey has resumed its monthly meeting schedule, and member turnout is promising. During the club's September meeting, members were treated to presentations about Greek silver pieces and 18th-century talers. A slide show and discussion focused on U.S. 19th-century silver type coins . . .

The Tucson Coin Club (TCC) produced a commemorative wood for its 29th Annual Tucson Rare Coin Show, which will be held January 29-31, 1993, at the Tucson Convention Center. Interested numismatists can receive a commemorative wood by sending 25 cents plus a large, self-addressed, stamped envelope to TCC, P.O. Box 17021, Tucson, AZ 85731 . . .

Ronda Johnson, youth advisor for California's Cupertino Coin Club (CCC), recently announced the inception of a new Young Numismatist program. Young members will be encouraged to attend meetings and participate in club activities through a credit-earning system. The system will allow participants to accumulate copper 1-credit and nickel 5-credit tokens that can then be used for club auctions, membership dues or raffle tickets. These tokens also are available to the public. Sets consisting of one copper and one nickel token can be ordered for $6.50 per pair, postpaid, from the CCC, P.O. Box 448, Cupertino, CA 95015-0448, Attention: Youth Advisor . . .

The Fairfield Coin Club and the Vallejo Numismatic Society, two California clubs, are planning their Sixth Annual Joint Christmas Party. The clubs will produce a 1-ounce, .999

The obverse will show the joint logo of both groups, an eagle perched atop the Liberty Bell. This is the second medal with an Anheuser-Busch theme to be produced by the two clubs. Interested collectors can send $20 for each medal (postpaid) to Fairfield Coin Club, 1992 Joint Medal, P.O. Box 944, Fairfield, CA 94533 . . .

Bright Idea

The Red Rose Coin Club of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, is alive and well—and growing, too. One way we keep members interested is to raffle a U.S. 1/10-ounce gold Eagle bullion coin at every meeting. The profits fund an annual picnic for members and their families. During the holidays, we offer turkeys as door prizes. We also have club hats, which make members easier to spot at large coin shows.

—William Miller

Send your bright idea for promoting or enhancing club participation to THE NUMISMATIST, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279. If we publish your suggestion, you'll receive a "Bright Idea" lapel pin.

Following the presentation, Horton was given a certificate of appreciation from the club for his involvement.

CLIFTON A. TEMPLE—ANA 3317

Clifton Augustus Temple died January 14, 1992. The 86-year-old collector, who joined the Association in 1928, held the ANA's fourth longest membership.

Active in the Detroit Coin Club, he served the organization as president for two terms. He also was a member of the American Numismatic Society; Association of Personalized Medal Issuers; Canadian Association of Token Collectors; European Union to Search for, Collect and Preserve Primitive and Curious Money; IKO Token and Medal Society; International Primitive Money Society; Michigan State Numismatic Society; Michigan Token and Medal Society; the Civil War Token Society; The Elongated Collectors; and the Token and Medal Society.

His numismatic interests included ancient and modern coins. Temple's Civil War store card collection, including many specimens from the Brand and Gutttag collections as well as pieces he discovered, formed the basis of the Michigan section in A Guide to Civil War Store Card Tokens by George and Melvin Fuld.

He is survived by his wife, Gladys, two sons and three grandchildren.

An Album for Every Purpose

HAVE SOME of your coins toned over the years? What kind of coins are they? In what type of holder did you store them and for how long? What kind of toning resulted? I am interested in readers' responses to these questions and will devote a column to this topic if interest warrants it. Please address your comments to me in care of The Numismatist, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279.

Q. I have a collection of brilliant uncirculated Franklin half dollars, Roosevelt dimes and Lincoln cents that are in albums with clear plastic sliding sleeves. Should these albums be used only for circulated coins? What is the best way to keep humidity away from copper coins in the summer?

—R.H., New York

A. The slides in your album can damage both circulated and uncirculated coins, although the damage to high-grade uncirculated pieces is likely to be the most severe. The slides are made of hard plastic that scrapes against the coins every time they are inserted and removed. The resulting scratches, or "slide marks," impair the grade and value of your coins.

I know of no album that is perfect for storing brilliant uncirculated coins; however, one relatively risk-free choice exists: albums with "pockets" that are larger than the coins. By placing each coin in an inert plastic capsule (like a Kointain™) before placing it in the album pocket, you prevent the coin's surface from coming into direct contact with the album.

Most of these albums contain polyvinyl chloride (PVC), either in the pockets or in the plastic that holds the pockets in the album, so you'll have to check your album periodically to make sure it doesn't leave PVC contamination on your plastic capsules after several months or years. The capsules will protect your coins from PVC damage for a while, but not indefinitely.

Storing your coins in an area of relatively constant temperature and low humidity (not a damp basement or alternately hot and cold attic) is a good idea. An air-conditioned area is preferable, as it is likely to be less humid. If you store your coins in an enclosed area like a safe or safe-deposit box, you might consider storing silica gel packets with them. Silica gel removes humidity from the air and is effective in areas of limited air circulation. If the silica gel is exposed to too much circulating or fresh air, it will quickly become hydrated and ineffective. (See my column "Silica Gel—A Dry Idea" in the September 1992 issue, p. 1319.)

Q. I am working on a set of Barber quarters in Extremely Fine (EF). As you noted in your column in the June 1992 issue of The Numismatist (p. 849), many of these coins have been dipped or worse. I find natural toning very attractive and have considered using old albums to "retone" dipped pieces. I have always saved old albums and have early Whitmans (with glue backing), National albums, and green ones made by Meghrig. How "good" are these albums for my intended purpose? —K.G., Arizona

A. Your idea of placing Barber quarters in old albums to naturally retone them is a good one, although it will most likely require more time in your dry climate than in many other areas. It's also good that you saved your old albums. I know some people who have paid a moderate amount of money for just the "right" album.

The Meghrig albums are my favorite. Many tend to tone coins spectacularly, but in my experience, a few do little or nothing. Of the other brands you mention, I prefer the old Whitmans over the National albums, although I know of people who have received good results with both.

A word of caution: the Meghriks contain the type of slides discussed above. I recommend removing the slides before you place any coins in the album and handling the album carefully as coins can fall out if the slides are not in place. Also, check the progress of your coins periodically. Many coins have been ruined by leaving them too long in holders that accelerate toning. •

Replicas of Obsolete Notes

THE ANA AUTHENTICATION Bureau (ANAAB) assists members in attributing and determining the genuineness of coins, medals and tokens. However, unknown to many, ANAAB also certifies obsolete paper money, from the 18th century to the present.

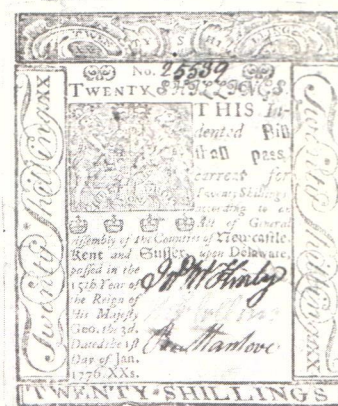

Many times throughout the year I receive phone calls from individuals inquiring about the origin and value of these obsolete notes, which predominately date from the 1770s to the 1860s. Most are amazed at my "Kreskin-like" skill in providing the serial number once I am given the date. Amazement fades to dismay when they are informed that "grandpa's heirloom" is actually a cheap imitation produced some 30 years ago.

Often they offer a fainthearted comment about the authentic appearance of the yellowed notes. I explain that these replicas are printed on paper that has been chemically treated to give it an antique, parchment-like look. The replicas usually are printed on paper that is crisp and wavy, with a tan color and browned edges.

Thousands of replica notes were produced prior to the Hobby Protection

The genuine 20-shilling note at the top is printed on rag paper and contains colored threads and chips of mica as counterfeit deterrents; the 5-shilling note is a replica.

Act of 1971. These copies greatly outnumber the originals and, for the most part, were intended to mark the centennial of the Civil War. Tourists could buy packets of replicas at historic battlefields or other places of interest. Some notes also were produced to promote goods or services.

In England in 1964, replicas of Confederate notes were included in packs of chewing gum as part of a promotion by ABC Chewing Gum of Romford, Essex (see F. Philipson's article, "A Sticky Confederate Issue," in the June 1974 issue of Bank Note Reporter). The notes have black lettering on pink faces and white backs, and measure $5\frac{1}{2}$ x $2\frac{3}{4}$ inches (genuine notes are $7\frac{1}{4}$ x $3\frac{1}{4}$ inches).

The telltale sign of a replica is the static serial number. Serial numbers on genuine specimens are hand-written and advance consecutively with every note. Replicas are produced in quantity and bear the same number.

The accompanying list highlights replicas known to ANAAB. It should not be considered complete, as others undoubtedly exist. I welcome any additions or refinements. Thanks to Ed Fleischmann, who compiled the main body of this work in 1979 during his tenure with the ANA Certification Service. •

I hereby understand and agree that I am submitting the above-described coin(s) to American Numismatic Association (ANA) for authentication under the following terms and conditions:

1. The opinion to be rendered by ANA as to the authenticity of said coin(s) represents the opinion of the examiners retained by ANA to authenticate coins. Such opinion does not constitute a guaranty that other competent examiners will not reach a different conclusion.

2. Any certificate of authentication issued pursuant hereto is not assignable and ANA's liability thereunder extends only to the party to whom said certificate is issued. ANA is not liable to any other party who may acquire said coin(s) by purchase or otherwise in reliance upon said certificate or to any other party whatsoever.

4. ANA's liability for any error in the authentication of any coin described in the certificate issued pursuant hereto is limited to the owner's value thereof set forth herein, or the true value thereof on the date of the within application, or the sum of $1,000.00, whichever is the lowest. ANA is not liable for any increase in the value of any such coin since the date of the within application, or for any interest on any amount payable under said certificate.

ANAAB SUBMISSION INFORMATION AND INSTRUCTIONS

GENERAL

The American Numismatic Association Authentication Bureau:

- Renders an opinion whether a numismatic item is genuine or otherwise, including authenticating of all coins (U.S., foreign, ancient) tokens, medals, and paper money (including obsolete U.S.).
- Issues a photo certificate with a registration number on genuine items.
- Cannot determine valuations of items—values must be supplied by the submitter.
- Fee schedule: $23 per coin for specimens valued up to $4,999 each. For items valued at $5,000 or more the cost is $40 per specimen. Genuine and counterfeit determinations will be at full charge. Sufficient return postage must be included with each submission. Postage only will be billed if no decision is reached.
- Provides reference attributions if possible.
- Uses its network of numismatic experts on a consulting basis for those items requiring additional examination and opinions.
- Provides counterfeit diagnostics on non-genuine specimens.
- Provides certification services for ANA members only.
- Provides additional information on membership services.

ADMINISTRATIVE

- Please submit coins in easy access holders. Mark holders with matching submission numbers.
- ANA will provide free insurance up to $1000 per coin (average). Shipments valued higher are charged $1.00 per thousand dollars of excess valuation. Fill out one Excess Insurance worksheet per order (see below).
- The ANA fee structure is predicated in part on accurate valuation of coins for insurance purposes. Overvaluation, even within the stated limits, raises costs and may result in a rate increase.
- Payment is due in full with order. Coins will not be processed until payment is received.

PHOTO CERTIFICATE

- A photo certificate will be issued for newly authenticated items and for reexamination and transfer of previously authenticated items submitted to ANACS prior to August 1, 1990.

articles and coins for sale in dealer ads. The Numismatist, also a monthly, was mainly a journal that dispensed articles and ANA news, containing fewer sources of coins. Numismatic News, a newspaper emanating from Iola, Wisconsin, was the most frequent visitor to collectors' homes, appearing biweekly the year 'round.

Amos, sensing a vacuum, asked dealers and prominent collectors whether the market would bear a weekly coin paper. Most told him it wasn't very likely. With that fine disregard for sensible advice that distinguishes the true entrepreneur, Amos plunged ahead, coming out with an eight-page sample edition of Coin World dated March 1960.

Dubbed "Vol. 1 Whole No. 0," the newborn newspaper featured an article explaining why the portrait of Lincoln on the cent did not look like photographs of Lincoln (the hair on the cent's bust was too curly). The publication's first column was titled "Current Comments." (Whitman Publishing placed an ad urging collectors to part with $1.75 for the 1960 edition of the Red Book.) Response to the sample edition was encouraging, and the first regular number of Coin World followed with a cover date of April 21, 1960.

Amos' gamble paid off handsomely. By December 1963, Coin World had 119,230 paid subscribers, rapidly surpassing Numismatic News in circulation and soon forcing its older competitor to become a weekly, too. As the two tabloids battled for circulation, they brought coin collecting and investing directly to tens of thousands of new consumers.

While the articles in The Numismatist and Numismatic Scrapbook Magazine tended to emphasize collecting, the stories in the two coin newspapers increasingly catered to the investment interests of their broad subscriber bases. The inexpensive ad rates they offered made it possible for newly formed, investment-oriented dealerships to cheaply hawk their speculative messages. But perhaps most important, there was now an honest-to-gosh media ready to cover the third momentous change of 1960.

This big occasion was based on a very minute distinction. About the time that Coin World's sample edition hit the newsstands, the U.S. Mint changed its "matrix" (or master die, from which working hubs are raised) for the Lincoln cent. The 1960 cents struck before the change had a smaller date than those produced afterward. Mint Director W.H. Brett at first pooh-pooed collectors who discovered the variety (one of the first was the wonderfully named Benson Balderdash). But, as business strikes from Denver and Philadelphia piled up (and proofs from the latter mint, as well), Brett had to 'fess up. The numismatic newspapers pounced on the variety with banner headlines, and the hunt was on for small dates, especially the relatively rarer Philadelphia issues.

The chase soon turned into a craze, the likes of which numismatics had never seen. Hard as it is to believe today, collectable coins then were available from circulation. Anyone with enough patience could assemble nearly complete sets of Walking Liberty halves, for example, by going through rolls purchased at face value from any bank. Now, however, with the influx of hundreds of millions of small dates, the collector didn't even need patience. Twenty rolls of cents could produce literally hundreds of small dates, scores of them in Brilliant Uncirculated condition. Many a budding numismatist started an evening without a coin to his name and ended it with a collection of dozens of rolls.

Small dates were made by the bushel basketful, and that was the way that many collected them. Despite the ready supply, however, prices for this variety rose steadily throughout 1960. The lavish coverage given to small dates by the coin papers stoked demand from collectors and increasingly from investors. Not even the large supply could satisfy the huge desire. Prices advanced, especially for uncirculated Philadelphia small dates. Only a year after their discovery, it would cost you $2.50 to buy one. It was a speculative spiral that fed this inexorable price rise throughout 1960.

And it was this spiral, more than anything, that changed everything. It attracted investors like a boxer attracts an entourage. A number of these gamblers matured into true collectors, and some even became numismatists. The great majority, however, remained speculators, and, combined with those who had already infiltrated the hobby, they became a real force.

It was no accident that Dr. Bilinski came out with the third edition of

A Guide to Coin Investment in 1962. By 1963, with the appearance of The Empire Investor's Report, even mainstream coin dealers began catering to the investment trade. By 1965 there was a nationwide coin shortage, which key U.S. government officials openly blamed on hoarding by coin investors. Numismatics would never be the same.

Today, when what we used to call the "coin hobby" is known as the "coin industry," it may seem strange that a collector would have affection for the year that opened up the floodgates to investment. Nevertheless, 1960 remains my favorite year. Sure, the long-range results of that year's events are deplorable, but the events themselves can't be beaten with a Louisville Slugger.

The horizons of coin collecting seemed endless. Red Books jumped out of the racks of every department store. The latest news from a red-hot coin market landed right in your mailbox every seven days. A coin collection was just waiting for you in your pocket change, available at face value!

Many a budding numismatist spent evenings searching through rolls of cents and studying the size of the date on 1960 pieces.

Most important, though, was the fact that there was room for everyone at the numismatic banquet. Collectors were welcome at the bourse table, whether they had $5 or $5,000 to spend. Newcomers could quickly become seasoned collectors, without fear of losing tons of cash over microscopic differences in grading. Coin collecting was more fun than a barrel of baseball cards. Club meetings, dealer shops, bourse floors—all sizzled with the excitement of discovery. Everything in numismatics was shiny and new. The year 1960 gave us 12 months for the ages. •

A native of Kalamazoo, Michigan, Joel Orosz holds a bachelor's degree from Kalamazoo College and master's and doctoral degrees from Case Western Reserve University. A charter member of the Numismatic Bibliomania Society, he also served as editor of its journal, THE ASYLUM. For his last article in THE NUMISMATIST, "Robert Gilmer Jr. and the Cradle Age of American Numismatics" (May 1990), Orosz received from the ANA a second-place Wayte and Olga Raymond Memorial Literary Award.

GUARANTEED PLACEMENT:

Guaranteed placement of ads is available for 35 percent above the rate for regular advertisements. Guaranteed-placement ads are placed on a specific page for the duration of the contract. All positions subject to availability.

BIND-IN CARDS:

Ad copy must be legible and not included in the body of a letter or other transmission. New ad copy cannot be accepted over the telephone. If an ANA member logo is used, the name and ANA number of the firm's principal officer must appear. Display classified advertisements will be placed under the classification most closely related to the ad's subject. All display classified ads appear without illustrations or logos. Requests for photography of numismatic items will be billed at prevailing national rates.

Every effort is made to ensure accuracy in all display advertising. Proofs of full-, half- and quarter-page ads will be provided if copy is received by the established deadline. Advertisers may be charged for extensive changes requested after deadline. The ANA is not responsible for any errors or omissions noted following the advertiser's approval of the advertisement.

CAMERA-READY ADS:

Original art in the form of art boards, veloxes and/or negatives must be provided by the advertiser. Halftones should be 120-line screen. Bleeds are not permitted.

A 5-percent discount will be given to contract advertisers for payment made in advance. A monthly service charge of 1 1/2 percent will be applied to balances unpaid over 30 days. Payment must accompany advertisements submitted by non-contract advertisers. Advertising contracts may be suspended if account balances are 90 days past due.

Send correspondence and advertising materials to ANA Advertising Sales Manager, The Numismatist, 818 N. Cascade Ave., Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279. Any complaints or requests for information regarding advertising in The Numismatist should be directed to the ANA Advertising Sales Manager.

If it is determined that a formal appraisal is necessary (for example, if the state taxing authority requests a formal appraisal to verify the value of the numismatic items declared on the state estate tax return), it is advantageous to secure an appraiser who will provide accurate valuations for a reasonable fee. The estate administrator or lawyer should at the least confine the selection to an ANA-member dealer.

Of course, as in any area involving the law, it is impossible to cover every situation that might arise. Depending on the personal income tax situations of the legatees or heirs, there may be tax advantages of donating the numismatic items to the American Numismatic Association or other institution, even if no such charitable provisions were made by the deceased. Only the advice of a knowledgeable attorney—and numismatic advisor—can provide maximum assurance that all options have been considered and the best choices have been made. •

A member of the Society of Paper Money Collectors and the New York Numismatic Club, David S. Lande is a New York City attorney in the field of estates, trusts and related matters.

AUCTION INSIGHTS BY BOB MERRILL

Once Again, the Collector Is King

Everyone always hopes for a hot ANA show, and this year's 101st Anniversary Convention held in Orlando, Florida, was no exception. As a matter of record, I think the combined humidity and temperature reached 200 or more every day. Since our firm conducted the ANA auction, we had to be there 10 days . . . seemed more like 10 years! I was in Orlando so long that all the Grecian Formula came out and my hair turned white, before falling out completely.

I have yet to speak with Ruthann Brettell, the ANA's convention director, to find out if the Orange County Convention Center is always free in August, but I have sources who tell me that it must be. Actually, the rain every afternoon was a blessing; it served to cool things down a bit.

This convention marked our sixth ANA auction since 1980, and it ranked second in terms of the number of registered floor bidders—595. Add in another 750 mail, fax and phone bidders, and you have a total of 1,345 active participants. It was interesting to see the inordinately large number of invoices in the $600 to $2,000 range consisting of less than five lots. That translates into collectors rather than dealers as the significant buyers.

Another surprising statistic was the number of local residents who were successful bidders. These were not the tourists seen wandering along International Drive dressed in yellow, double-waffle-weave leisure suits, but collectors whose zip code location was within 300 miles of Orlando.

I mention the above figures because they show that the collector is back, feeling comfortable enough to jump in at these price levels. There were 38 floor bidders in Orlando with whom we have never transacted business before, each of whom spent $600 or more. Big deal? You bet, because they are the new buyers—the future of commercial numismatics.

From the gentleman who patiently explained the differences in 1850 dollars (the knob does not always join the cusp) to the kind lady who collects autumn leaves with her 7-year-old son, we made many new friends at the ANA celebration. Most enjoyed themselves and will be back at future conventions. It is our job to make sure that they return, for the collector is king. •

Bob Merrill has served as auction director for Heritage Numismatic Auctions in Dallas, Texas, since 1976. Previously he taught history at a Dallas junior college. Heritage, selected as the official auctioneer for ANA anniversary conventions through 1995, has been awarded more ANA auctions since 1980 than all other firms combined.

CURATOR'S CORNER

BY ROBERT W. HOGE

Consider Becoming a Museum Supporter

Since 1992 is fast coming to a close, ANA members might consider some tax planning strategies before the holiday season begins. The Museum staff encourages all past and future donors to consider the possible advantages of presenting gifts of numismatic material to the ANA Museum before year's end.

In general, the policy of the Museum is to have two excellent examples of every genuine numismatic item. If offered an item of higher quality than the specimens already in the collection, the Museum accepts the proffered donations and may dispose of the lower-grade item already in the cabinet. Legally held, non-genuine items—altered, replicated pieces and counterfeit—are accepted by the Museum to remove them from the marketplace. They are added to the reference collections maintained primarily for use by the ANA Authentication Bureau, which now operates under the auspices of the Museum.

Still relatively young, the ANA Museum's cabinet is deficient in many major collecting categories. For examples of subject areas in which the ANA collection is less than adequate, contact the ANA Museum, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, telephone 719/632-2646 (fax 719/634-4085). Items in your own collection could constitute a truly important addition to the Museum's holdings, and their ability to increase awareness and enjoyment of this wondrous field.

Although the ANA can accept worthwhile donations beyond those items sought to be added to the Museum or Resource Center, donors should bear in mind that some materials may have to be disposed of in order for the ANA to derive appropriate benefit. Such donations may be considered "unrelated" to the Association's established purpose by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and thus would not entitle donors to the same degree of appreciated value deduction as would otherwise be the case. Prospective contributors should consult their tax advisors or the IRS.

The Museum staff encourages potential donors of bulk, low-value material to seriously consider disposing of the items themselves and donating the proceeds to the Museum, since, under the fiduciary obligations by which the ANA must abide, the cost of processing such items may not be cost effective.

The ANA is a tax-exempt organization as defined under section 501(c)3 of the Internal Revenue Code. Therefore, all donations to the ANA qualify as charitable contributions for income tax purposes. The Museum is not, and cannot be, a tax-consulting service. For additional information about potential tax benefits of donations, refer to relevant IRS literature or a tax advisor.

The ANA also would like to encourage those collectors who do not wish to donate their collections to the Museum during their lifetime to seriously consider the advantages to their estates of bequeathing their collection to the ANA. Please consult your lawyer as to the best methods for considering the Museum in your will. All potential donors are encouraged to have their collection appraised by an independent, qualified appraiser, as defined by the IRS.

The Museum has been greatly improved by the generosity of its many benefactors. Each month in this column I feature recent donations of interesting numismatic items from the ANA cabinet, and will continue to do so during the coming year. Consider becoming one of the individuals designated a Museum supporter, and give me the welcome opportunity to highlight your contribution! •

Arthur Fitts were all there. The second suit was indeed filed, but later dismissed by the court.

The outpouring of expressions of condolence from dealers and collectors alike, from all across the country, showed that most professionals are far from that ilk. I tell this now only to show that the actions of a few can taint the problems of many. There are collectors, paying the same dues as dealers, who cannot afford to absent themselves from a week of work. Only the weekend allows their travel to the convention. On the other side of the same coin, there are bourse dealers who have shops requiring their presence come Monday morning after a week-long absence at the convention.

The problem will be addressed at a special meeting of the Board set for December 12 and 13 in New York City. One solution may be to begin the convention on a Sunday and close toward the week's end, allowing those with but a single day to attend a full bourse. Or, schedule extended hours for the last Saturday and end the show that evening. As the grand finale, an annual breakfast could be set for the following morning in place of an increasingly cost-prohibitive banquet the night before.

The ANA is an organization in which one member's rights are as important as another's. An equitable solution will be found, but, in the meantime, let's hear from you, the member, as to what action should be taken in New York. •

"Key" coins are once again becoming the focus of Numismatics! The population reports issued by PCGS and NGC have made informed individuals acutely aware of how desirable and undervalued many truly rare and low population coins are when compared to most highly touted "generic" coins. When working with coins of this nature, I believe that it is essential to enlist the help of a specialist. In this way, you can benefit from experience while avoiding the pitfalls.

I have been dealing exclusively in rare date gold coins for over a dozen years. My reputation and knowledge in this field is unsurpassed. I would be pleased to work with you to build your "World Class" collection or investment portfolio.

Please call me today, so we can discuss your needs.

WE WOULD LIKE TO PURCHASE YOUR ANCIENT COINS

We are aware that many of the readers of The Numismatist own ancient coins. It goes along with the type of person who is a member of the ANA. Some of you have purchased your ancients decades ago, and some of you have purchased them recently. Some of you are actively collecting, while others have lost interest or are unwilling to pay the current market prices. In fact, some of you may have inherited your ancient coins and have no real idea of what you own or what they are worth.

My company is one of the largest firms in the United States that deals in ancient coins.

We specialize in ancient coins, we are knowledgeable about ancient coins, we keep track of the current market worldwide, and over the past years, we have purchased millions of dollars of ancient coins.

We particularly NEED TO BUY: Roman gold, Greek gold, Egyptian gold, Greek silver (particularly the larger denominations), Roman silver, and Roman large bronzes (particularly the coins of the 12 Caesars).

We will buy ENTIRE COLLECTIONS, ESTATES, HOLDINGS, ACCUMULATIONS.

We can PAY by company cheque, bank cheque, cash, or in any currency openly traded in the free world.

If your preference is to sell your ancient coins at auction, we will act as your agent and can arrange a name sale, or retain your anonymity—whichever you prefer.

A Kick in the Access

UNHAPPY WITH THE amount of business they failed to do during the ANA's splendid 101st Anniversary Convention this past summer, some dealers criticized the selection of Orlando, Florida, as the convention's site. Interestingly, others indicated they did well, but that aberration occurs every year, no matter where the show is held.

Immediately following each ANA convention, regardless of its location, hobby newspapers publish quotes from a few vocal dealers who annually complain that:

- 1) "No one wants to come to (name of convention city) in (name of summer month) for a coin show!"
- 2) "There were too many tire-kickers and not enough buyers" (for overpriced and/or overgraded merchandise).
- 3) "We'd have much better attendance if the ANA would let dealers sell (baseball cards / pocket knives / postcards / World's Fair spoons)."

It's a shame some people judge ANA conventions only on the action (or lack thereof) in buying and selling. They completely forget that there is much more to the show. Despite the dealers' dismal comments about the bourse, a thousand people attended educational seminars in Orlando.

How do we resolve these complaints?

An article in the September 1 issue of Numismatic News raised the thoughtful question, "How about a permanent location for the ANA convention?"

The story quoted a Florida dealer who suggested that "the ANA hold the convention in Chicago every year because it's so accessible. You have to have a location that is within driving distance for collectors and vest-pocket dealers."

Now, let me see if I understand this logic: the 1993 ANA convention is scheduled for Baltimore, but someone from Florida wants a convention site that's "accessible" and "within driving distance," so he's suggested moving it to Chicago?

According to my Mobil Road Atlas and Trip Planning Guide, Chicago is a mere 696-mile jaunt from Baltimore. Yep, that's accessible driving distance for Maryland collectors and vest-pocket dealers, but then it takes me up to an hour each morning just to drive the 13 miles into the city.

And, what about this sympathy for vest-pocket dealers? (You know, the guys who pay nothing to conduct coin business at the convention's food concessions.) Perhaps we should make it even easier for them to unfairly compete against the 400 or so dealers who generously support the ANA by annually paying $900 or more for a bourse table on the convention floor.

I'm looking forward to Baltimore's crabcakes next summer, as well as to the ANA's returning to Chicago in 1999. The Rosemont/O'Hare Exposition Center is an accessible 22-mile drive from my house. But, I don't know if the spacious Expo Center will be needed again.

During the ANA's astronomically huge 100th Anniversary Convention there in 1991, the bourse and exhibit space took up nearly 97 square miles, encompassing eight suburbs and a significant portion of southern Wisconsin. However, if the numismatic market's current downward trend continues, the 1993 convention bourse may require only slightly more room than the back seat of a 1975 Volkswagen Beetle, accessibly parked in Chicago or Baltimore. •

Rabbi Teitelbaum stops his Volvo to ask directions to the Israel Numismatic Collectors Club meeting. He soon suspects that he is not on the right road to midtown Manhattan.

UNEQUALED RECORD OF AUCTION SUCCESS

When you consign to Bowers and Merena, you consign to a firm with an unequalled record of auction success. While others endeavor to build their reputations with promises, we have already built ours with results. Consider, also, that of the top four most valuable collections ever auctioned, we catalogued and auctioned three! The $25 million Garrett Collection for The Johns Hopkins University, the $20 million Norweb Collection, and the $12.4 million Eliasberg Collection of U.S. Gold Coins.

Auctions by Bowers and Merena, Inc. invites you to consign your coins to our 1992 auction season. Right now we are accepting consignments for our next several sales. Contact us today!

Announcing The Lowest Authorized Mintage For A U.S. Commemorative Silver Dollar In Nearly A Century.

To receive a Pre-Issue discount, order before August 28, 1992.

To commemorate the 200th anniversary of the White House, the U.S. Mint, by Act of Congress, has created a very special limited mintage coin. With only 500,000 available, The White House 200th Anniversary Coin boasts the lowest authorized mintage for a commemorative silver dollar since 1900. Each proof coin is struck multiple times to highlight the details against a mirror-like background. Furthermore, the proof version is distinctive because it's the first proof silver dollar commemorative to bear the West Point mint mark.

But this coin is more than an outstanding addition to your collection. For each coin you buy, a $10 surcharge will be paid to The White House Endowment Fund — a permanent source of support for the fine art, historic furnishings and public rooms of the White House.

Due to this coin's appeal and low authorized mintage, a quick sellout is possible. To receive the Pre-Issue discount, mail the order form at right or call 1-800-352-5400 no later than August 28, 1992.

This legal tender coin weighs 26.73 grams. Composition: 90% silver (.76 troy ounce), 10% copper. Diameter: 1.500 inches. Mint and Mark: Proof, West Point ("W"), Uncirculated, Denver ("D").

Coins enlarged to show detail. Designs depicted are renderings of the White House 200th Anniversary Silver Dollar Coin and are subject to slight modification prior to engraving.

Please accept my order for the coin(s) indicated. I understand that if my order is postmarked no later than August 28, 1992, I am eligible for the Pre-Issue price shown, that orders are not valid until verified and accepted by the Mint, and that once accepted, orders may not be cancelled. Supplies are limited.

FROM COLLECTOR TO INVESTOR

The most trusted grading service available

For many of today's numismatists coin collecting started at a young age with the discovery of a few 'old' nickles or pennies.

As we grew older the excitement of finding, trading and collecting coins stayed with us.

Eventually, the hobby became a business and the business grew into an industry.

At NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA (NGC), we are committed to advancing numismatics—both as a hobby and as a business.

THE CREDIBLE SOURCE FOR SUPERIOR, CONSISTENT COIN GRADING SERVICES.

Now dealers, collectors, and investors can be confident that they will receive consistent coin grading time after time.

The NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA, with over 500 charter and associate members, provides the industry with an independent, credible, and superior coin grading service.

For the NGC dealer nearest you, contact: Numismatic Guaranty Corporation,

We Cannot Move Forward by Always Looking Back

IT IS AUGUST already—one year into my current term, one year left to go. While it may be time to review the year past, the time would be better spent addressing problems not yet overcome, namely declining membership. A preview of the Association's 1991-92 Annual Report shows a decline from an adjusted gross figure of 30,806 members (clubs and individuals) for the last fiscal year to a current paid membership of 28,971. The trend is not encouraging.

Whenever an executive—elected or hired—faces a decline in membership, it is time to ask, "Why?"

One can point to the current recession, to the fact that there is little pocket change worth culling from circulation to start someone on a life-long hobby, or that coins are now too expensive to collect. These are excuses, not solutions.

It may well be that we are not meeting the needs of collectors today, not giving them the reason they need for belonging to the Association. Perhaps we are guilty of looking back, not forward, and relying too heavily on those services that well served the collector for generations past, principally The Numismatist, the library and conventions. Over the years, we have added others—club and district representation, mediation service, authentication, summer conferences, Washington liaison, supplemental insurances and credit cards. Some are unique to our Association, others are available to most groups sharing common interests.

FROM YOUR PRESIDENT
BY EDWARD C. ROCHETTE

It is time for the American Numismatic Association to prepare for the 21st century, to make the ANA an indispensable source for the numismatist. It is time for us to take advantage of the technology now in our hands and put it to work for our mutual benefit.

Take the computer, for example. Would members take greater advantage of the world's largest circulating numismatic library if it could be accessed by computer?

Would interaction between members increase if the ANA maintained a computer bulletin board? I am not suggesting a pricing network or a classified marketplace, but rather an informational communication network between members.

Suppose, for a minute, that you are planning a trip. Would you take advantage of a membership service by which you could dial in to secure locations of coin clubs along the way and see if their meeting times coincided with your schedule? A telecommunication calendar of events or club listing is not beyond the realm of current technology.

How many times have you had a problem or a concern, vowed to write a letter, even mentally composed it, then never got around to writing or sending the letter? Sound familiar?

In the meantime, the problem has not been resolved. The frustration remains and contributes further to your dissatisfaction. Would expeditious communication help? The technology is here. It is called facsimile transmission, or Fax. Would you, as a member, feel better served if you could access headquarters via Fax? If you feel such service to be advantageous, then the cause of your membership retention is better served.

The potential of computer networking is far too great not to study or take advantage of. At the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando this month, I intend to appoint a task force to study the potential benefits to the membership of computer networking.

If you believe you have something to contribute to this task force, see me at the convention, or address a letter to me at headquarters. Better still, Fax it. The number is 719/634-4085.

It is never too early to start stepping forward. We must be ready to enter the 21st century. •

Would the ANA Resource Center be more valuable to members if they could access the library's 30,000 volumes by computer?

German Commemorative Issues Intended for Circulation

Thanks to David Thompson for his thought-provoking article "Commemorative Coins of the Nazis" (March 1992, p. 351). The following comments are offered in response to some of his assertions.

Germany's history of commemorative coinages is anything but brief; rather it is one of the longest in history. The coinages of the German States, especially those of Bavaria in the 1800s, offer a large number of commemorative design types. Even after the Empire was formed in 1871, we see a large number of commemorative issues (the 2-, 3- and 5-mark pieces), mostly struck by the same mints that produced the commemoratives of the Weimar Republic, the Third Reich and even modern Germany, both East and West.

Germany's approach to commemorative issues has always been different than that in America. In many cases, so-called "commemorative" issues were struck in huge quantities and placed into general circulation. The term "limited issue" applies to only a handful of Weimar issues; in fact, most mintages were quite high (for example, over 3 million 1925-A 3-mark pieces commemorating the 1,000th year of the Rhineland were struck).

Rather, the Germans used their highest-denomination coins to provide a variety of design types in keeping with their rich tradition of centuries past. In my opinion, the Weimar commemoratives were more effective in lifting the morale of the German people (who suffered under the onerous war reparation provisions of the Treaty of Versailles and the humiliation of defeat in World War I) than they were in obtaining hard currency.

In fact, the first Weimar "commemorative" referred to by Thompson was an aluminum piece (KM-28 and KM-29) which was struck in huge quantities. This commemorative is readily available even today in bag quantities. Its even more common counterparts in the aluminum 200- and 500-mark denominations proclaimed "Unity, Law and Freedom"—uplifting ideals, indeed.

Hitler was not the first to blur the distinction between circulating and commemorative pieces. This is evidenced by the large numbers of circulated commemoratives of the 1871 to 1933 period. Also, if we take away the Nazi commemoratives listed by Thompson, there were no other coins larger than the 1-mark denomination issued by the Nazis. What was left to circulate? When World War II began, Nazi Germany discontinued not only whatever "commemorative" program it had, it also discontinued any and all denominations over 50 pfennigs!

Regarding style, the Weimar issues were no less unified in their face than were the Nazi coins. Virtually every one of the silver Weimar issues from the 1 mark to the 5 marks, from the regular issues to commemoratives, is linked by some version (albeit stylized) of the German imperial eagle. Only the 10th Anniversary of the Weimar Constitution 3- and 5-mark pieces lack the eagle; on the Waldeck-Prussia Union 3 marks and the Liberation of Rhineland 3 and 5 marks, the eagle appears on both the obverse and the reverse.

The eagle design that appears on the later Nazi 2- and 5-mark pieces is actually a version of the Nazi standard; the eagle's wings, normally outstretched in a horizontal fashion, were drooped in order to fit into the circumference of the coin.

In 1942 not one, but two patterns with Hitler's head were struck: the "Hero Memorial Day" 5 marks (Schaaf ad372a/G2) mentioned by Thompson and another, more generic issue (Schaaf ad372a/G1) that showed a similar obverse and a non-commemorative reverse. Upon seeing the latter pattern, Hitler commanded that his portrait was not to appear on any coin (meaning circulating issues, commemorative or otherwise) until the end of the war. This was in keeping with his expression to Speer, "There are two possibilities for me: To win through with all my plans, or to fail. If I win, I shall be one of the greatest men in history. If I fail, I shall be condemned, despised and damned."

Numerous patterns exist for Nazi coins, mostly of the lower denominations, but a few 5-mark patterns are known as well. These 1935-dated pieces were designed to commemorate the referendum vote to restore the Saarland to Germany (on January 13, 1935, the inhabitants of the Saarland voted almost 10 to 1 in favor of the proposal). Like the Hitler head patterns, these designs never made it into circulation.

While the Nazis had lots to be guilty about, they were no more guilty than are most other countries and regimes of using coins as propaganda tools.

Local Banks May Be Ripe for Cherry-picking

Over the years I, too, have lamented the passing of the "good old days" when silver coins of many kinds were readily available from circulation. As a child, I started collecting coins with the famous, blue Whitman folders.

Several times in recent years I took $100 and relieved a local bank of 10 rolls of half dollars. I found a few 40-percent silver Kennedy halves, but not really enough to justify my time and gasoline.

Not so long ago, I decided that perhaps I might try cherrypicking a local bank once again. To my amazement and delight, I found one entire roll of 40-percent silver Kennedy halves and ended up with over two rolls by the time I completed my search. Was I ever excited!

I decided to push my luck, return the searched rolls, make up the difference and purchase another $100 in halves from the same bank. After purchasing my next set of halves from the bank, the teller informed me that she had only six rolls remaining. I requested she keep those rolls separate for me and promised to return later that day.

The next 10 rolls proved as lucrative as the first! I couldn't wait to get back to the bank for those final six rolls. Little did I know what was in store for me! Those six remaining rolls were the best yet! Not only was the distribution of 40-percent silver coins about the same as the previous 20 rolls, but one roll—one entire roll—was composed of Brilliant Uncirculated 1964-P Kennedy halves!

My total search through those halves produced the following:

- Twenty 90-percent silver 1964-P specimens—Brilliant Uncirculated
- Four 90-percent silver 1964-P specimens—circulated
- Seven 40-percent silver 1965 specimens—circulated
- Eight 40-percent silver 1966 specimens—circulated
- Forty-Two 40-percent silver 1967

specimens—circulated

- Fifty-Two 40-percent silver 1968-D specimens—circulated
- Twenty-Three 40-percent silver 1969-D specimens—circulated

I suppose it just goes to show that with a little luck, a lot of persistence and a little money for an absolutely no-risk investment, there is still quite a bit of silver waiting to be mined from local bank vaults and piggybanks!

ANA Centennial Celebrated in Smithsonian Exhibit

ANA President Edward C. Rochette recently toured the new Smithsonian Institution exhibit "Coins—Documents of the Past—A Celebration of the Centennial of the American Numismatic Association." "This is not only a spectacular exhibit of the ANA's first 100 years, but it's also a great honor to have the Association and this hobby recognized in this fashion," Rochette said after viewing the exhibit with Elvira Clain-Stefanelli, executive director of the National Numismatic Collection at the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History.

According to Clain-Stefanelli, "The exhibit commemorates not only the ANA and its many years of service to the numismatic community, but [it] also is dedicated to the many friends and colleagues of numismatics who have assisted us over the years." Calling the creation of the Smithsonian exhibit a "sentimental journey," Clain-Stefanelli says her goal was to show the fun collectors can and have had in the avocation.

"I have to confess that this exhibit was a serious challenge," she said. "In the more than 30 years I have been at the Smithsonian, I have produced more than 30 exhibits, but I must admit that none was as difficult as this one." Clain-Stefanelli said she wanted to graphically depict the evolution of the ANA and the hobby. In eight cases, the exhibit displays the history of the Association; its programs, educational offerings and conventions; the changes in the ANA monthly journal, The Numismatist (now in its 105th year of publication); the odd and curious side of numismatics; the collector and the dealer; and the "numismatic legacy" of the ANA.

"I've been to nearly all of the ANA's conventions since 1952," Clain-Stefanelli says. "It was difficult and exhausting to prepare a graphic representation of such a large and wonderful organization as the ANA." She acknowledged those who helped her with the exhibit, including Robert W. Hoge, ANA Money Museum curator; Harvey Stack and Carl W.A. Carlson of the New York rare coin firm of Stack's; and Douglas Mudd, Cathy Keen and Yvonne Powell of the Smithsonian Institution.

Despite the difficulties Clain-Stefanelli had in preparing the exhibit about the ANA's first 100 years, she says, "It was a work of love. I hope that of the thousands of people who will visit this exhibit, maybe some of them will sprout into collectors and explore these old coins."

The exhibit will be on display at the Washington, D.C., museum through August. For more information, contact the National Museum of American History, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC 20560.

Exchange Club Ideas through Newsletter "Round Robin"

ANA club members who are interested in reading the publications of other coin clubs across the United States and abroad can do so through the club newsletter "round robin," an idea launched in 1989 by Douglas B. McDonald of Reno, Nevada. Because of other commitments, McDonald cannot continue to coordinate the program. It will now be headed by ANA

ORLANDO Convention Update

The Olympic spirit will burn brightly at the show, with Olympians, medals, coins and live demonstrations courtesy of the United States and International Olympic Committees and an array of world mints.

Elvis Presley—the "King of Rock 'n' Roll"—will make a special appearance at the convention. The ANA, United States Postal Service, Royal Canadian Mint, Legendary Coins, and Krause Publications are putting together a tribute to the crooner. A set of Elvis medals will be given away at the show.

An 1898 Morgan dollar graded a near-perfect, Proof-69 will be on display. Collector/investor Andrew Barnett will exhibit the coin he calls the "ultimate black-and-white cameo."

Heritage Numismatic Auctions—the ANA's official auctioneer for Orlando—has prepared a 3,500-lot, 20,000+ coin auction valued at more than $5 million. The rarities will be offered in five auction sessions over four days.

The United States Mint and the James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation will be soliciting designs for a 1993 commemorative medal honoring James Madison and the Bill of Rights.

Free gifts and discounts will be offered to new ANA members who sign up at the convention. •

Membership Director Kim Dixon.

The club newsletter exchange is a great source of ideas for club activities. The only expense incurred by participants is the postage necessary to forward the samples of club publications to the next recipient.

If your club is interested in circulating its newsletters to other ANA clubs, receiving other clubs' publications, or both, write to ANA Membership Director Kim Dixon, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279.

tor, exhibitor, judge and speaker Robert L. Hendershott was appointed honorary general chairman of the American Coin Show: A World's Fair of Money, scheduled for August 12-16 in Orlando, Florida, while ANA Governor and numismatic author Kenneth Bressett will head the 1993 Early Spring show planned for March 11-13 in Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Hendershott's appointment came at the request of 101st Anniversary Convention General Chairman Roger Bryan, who particularly appreciates the positive attitude the "elder statesman" brings to all his activities. Hendershott began his numismatic activities in 1930 and became an ANA member in 1931. At the ANA's centennial celebration in Chicago, he was honored as the tenth longest member of the Association. He has served as an ANA district delegate and regional representative, and was a 1986 recipient of the ANA Medal of Merit. Known as "Mr. FUN," Hendershott is the founder and first president of the Florida United Numismatists (FUN). He has served that organization in many capacities, including general chairman of its annual conventions. Hendershott's convention experience is augmented by service as assistant general chairman of the ANA's 1967 anniversary convention in Miami Beach, Florida, and general chairman of the ANA's 1974 show, also held in Miami Beach.

Bressett was nominated by the Colorado Springs Numismatic Society and appointed following a poll of the ANA Board of Governors. ANA President Edward C. Rochette said, "Ken will do a wonderful job as general chairman. He knows numismatics, the ANA, its conventions, and the people who will help make this one of our best Early Spring conventions."

A life member of the ANA, fellow of the Royal Numismatic Society, and member of the American Numismatic Society, Professional Numismatists Guild and the Numismatic Literary Guild, Bressett was appointed to the U.S. Assay Commission in 1966 by President Lyndon B. Johnson. He is a 1978 recipient of the ANA Medal of Merit and proudly claims attendance at every ANA convention since 1960. Although a prolific writer and columnist, he is best-known as the editor of the popular Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book").

Convention Medal Design Taken from Florida Bank Note

is adapted from a vignette that appeared on a $4 note issued in 1844 by the Bank of Florida at Tallahassee. The vignette depicts a Florida alligator on the bank of a stream in the foreground, with an early steam-powered train crossing a bridge in the background.

The design on the reverse of the medal, which, like that of the obverse, was selected by the convention host club—Florida United Numismatists (FUN)—depicts an outline of the State of Florida superimposed over a map of the United States. The ANA logo and convention dates, surrounded by AMERICAN NUMISMATIC ASSOCIATION 101ST ANNIVERSARY CONVENTION, complete the design.

The first territorial bank to be established in Florida, in 1829, the Bank of Florida at Tallahassee was absorbed by the Central Bank of Florida in 1832 and subsequently taken over by the Union Bank in 1838. However, the Union Bank ran into financial difficulties, and the Bank of Florida's charter was sold in 1842 and operated as an agency of the banking firm of David L. Kennedy of New York. The $4 note—signed by Henry L. Rutgers, a Tallahassee attorney and bank cashier, and James George Graham, president—was one of the last notes to be issued by the bank.

The vignette used for the convention medal was supplied by American Bank Note Commemoratives. The medal will be struck in silver and bronze by SilverTowne of Winchester, Indiana, which also will produce a bronze convention badge. A two-medal set, comprised of 1 1/4-inch silver and bronze medals, can be purchased at the convention for $36 (mail order, $39); a 2 1/4-inch bronze medal will be available for $31 (mail order, $33.50); and a convention badge can be purchased for $13 (mail order, $14).

Presenting The 1992 Commemorative Coins From The Royal Canadian Mint

Beautifully crafted coins with historic significance and old-fashioned charm

The 1992 $100 Gold Coin celebrating the 350th anniversary of the founding of Montreal

The city of Montreal, originally called Ville-Marie, had romantic beginnings. In May of 1642, French soldier Paul de Chomedey de Maisonneuve led a mission to bring Christianity to the New World. Despite many hardships, the settlement thrived and these prophetic words came true: "That which you see is only a mustard seed, but this small seed will produce a tall tree that will bring forth wonders."

Specifications: Proof finish only. 17th in the Royal Canadian Mint's series of Commemorative Gold Proof Coins. 58.3% gold, 41.7% silver — 1/4 troy ounce of gold. Diameter: 27.0 mm (1.05 in.). 2.15 mm thick. REVERSE: de Maisonneuve holding a plan of the Fort of Ville-Marie, with Montreal's present-day skyline in the background. OBVERSE: Effigy of Queen Elizabeth II. Presented in a brown leather case, with a numbered Certificate of Authenticity. Mintage is restricted to 55,000 coins or the number of orders postmarked by Dec. 31, 1992.

The 1992 Commemorative Dollar marking the 175th anniversary of the Kingston-Toronto stagecoach service

In 1817, Samuel Purdy established regular stagecoach service between Kingston and York (now Toronto). Brave travellers faced bitter cold weather, erratic driving and a trip that took up to 48 hours each way. Even so, winter was the best season for stagecoach travel, since the coaches whisked through the snow on runners.

New! Higher silver content. The 1992 Commemorative Silver Dollar is now 92.5% silver (sterling) and 7.5% copper. Proof or Brilliant Uncirculated finish. 27th in the series of Commemorative Dollars authorized by the Government of Canada. Weight: 25.175 g (.88 oz.). REVERSE: A "stage-sleigh" drawn by four horses. OBVERSE: Effigy of Queen Elizabeth II. The Proof Dollar is presented in a luxurious black display case. The Brilliant Uncirculated Dollar comes in a protective transparent case.

Rare opportunity for collectors

The 1992 Coin Sets contain all six of Canada's beautiful circulating coins — and this year, a special bonus: the 25c Caribou coin bearing the inscription "1867-1992," will be available only in those sets. All other 25c coins will depict different designs this year to mark Canada's 125th anniversary.

Entertainment Legends Celebrated in Metal

Thirty years ago, one of America's most memorable screen stars ended her life in the bedroom of her Brentwood, California, home. Marilyn Monroe—waif, seductress and sex symbol—had it all, yet nothing. Although a popular leading lady in films such as Some Like It Hot, Bus Stop and Gentleman Prefer Blonds, the 36-year-old bombshell never found what she sought most: respect as an actress, motherhood and a happy marriage.

Monroe's acting career was on the wane when her body was discovered

Actual Size: 90mm

Designed by Serge Levet and struck by the French Mint in 1986, this bronze medal celebrating the career of screen legend Marilyn Monroe has become a collector's item.

Legendary Coins of Toronto, Canada, has issued a set of gold and silver medals to mark the 15th anniversary of the death of Elvis Presley, "The King of Rock 'n' Roll." A complete set of the commemorative pieces, valued at $2,000, will be given away this month at the ANA's convention in Orlando, Florida.

the morning of August 5, 1962. But her voluptuous image has been captured forever on film and medals, among them a bronze medallion created by Serge Levet and struck by the French Mint in 1986.

On August 16, 1977, the music world lost the "King of Rock 'n' Roll," Elvis Presley. Born in 1935 in Tupelo, Mississippi, the survivor of identical twins, the teenaged Presley toured locally as "The Hillbilly Cat" and recorded a number of singles with a regional label before being signed by RCA in 1955. He became an instant hit on the airwaves and in concert, his on-stage gyrations earning him the nickname "Elvis the Pelvis," as well as the scorn of parents and religious leaders.

To commemorate the 15th anniversary of his reported death, Legendary Coins of Toronto, Canada, in conjunction with the Royal Canadian Mint (RCM), has released a series of gold and silver medals honoring Presley. The obverse of each medal bears a view of his Memphis mansion, Graceland; the reverses capture him in his youth and later years.

In conjunction with the observance of Presley's death, the ANA, together with Legendary Coins, Krause Publications, the RCM and the United States Postal Service (whose much-publicized "Elvis" stamp will be unveiled in January), will present a numismatic tribute to "The King" at its 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida, August 12-16, 1992. During the show, convention visitors can participate in a free drawing for a complete set of the Elvis Presley commemorative medals, valued at $2,000.

Bank Note Theft Reported

On April 23, 1992, a currency collection valued at more than $150,000 was taken from an 1870 Wells Fargo safe in the home of Ray Rennick of Natrona Heights, Pennsylvania. A large part of the collection consisted of rare National Bank notes issued by various banks in the Pittsburgh area from 1810 to 1929. Rennick was using the notes as the basis for a book he was writing.

Among the notes reported stolen (serial numbers and reference numbers from Robert Friedberg's Paper Money of the United States are given in parentheses) were a Series 1863 First National Bank of Kittanning $10 note (Z5712/409); Series 1882 Leechburg National Bank $10 note (VP9150/574); Series 1875 First National Bank of Tarentum $5 note (X139948/401); Series 1882 Peoples National Bank of Tarentum $5 note (T812531/574); Series 1882 Date Back Bank of Pittsburgh National Association $50 (A21892/563); Series 1853 Tradesmen National Bank of Pittsburgh $2 note (804810/387); Series 1863 First Merchants and Manufacturing National Bank of Pittsburgh $20 note (A886776/427); Series 1882 Brown Back German National Bank of Allegheny $50 note (B253536/515); Series 1875 First Metropolitan National Bank of Pittsburgh $10 note (A63956/416); and a Series 1902 Mellon National Bank of Pittsburgh $5 note (A48103/595).

Other major components of the stolen collection were Biblical-era coins, world crowns dating from the 16th century, American colonial currency, Confederate States of America currency, and various U.S. gold coin proof sets.

Individuals with information or questions should contact the Harrison Township Police, telephone 412/224-3355.

American Eagle Coin Presented to Lech Walesa

President of the Republic of Poland Lech Walesa was presented with an American Eagle gold bullion coin during his May 3 visit to the United States Pavilion at Expo '92 in Seville, Spain. U.S. Information Agency Commissioner General Frederick M. Bush presented the 1-ounce gold coin to President Walesa during his visit to the pavilion's Bill of Rights exhibit.

Walesa, who founded Poland's Solidarity trade-union movement and was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1983, appears briefly in a videotape that is part of the display. The exhibit features an original copy of the Bill of Rights, the first time that such has been displayed outside the United States.

Billed as the largest exposition of its kind in history, Expo '92 celebrates "The Age of Discoveries," the 500th anniversary of Columbus' voyage to the New World. More than 100 countries are represented in 95 international pavilions through October 12, 1992.

Money-Back Guarantee Offered on Bullion Coins

The 1991 Australian gold Nugget and platinum Koala proof sets are now marketed with a 100-percent, money-back guarantee. According to Deborah Spinosa Craig of A-Mark Precious Metals, "When we first discussed the sets with dealers in December, many were concerned about their customers' buying a product which had not performed well in the past. We believe the 1991 proofs are notably different from the earlier issues because of the considerable reduction in their mintages (the proof Nugget's mintage in 1986 was 12,000 full sets). We told our dealers we would come up with an answer addressing their concern."

In late 1991, A-Mark entered into an exclusive agreement with GoldCorp Australia to distribute the gold Nugget and platinum Koala proof sets in the United States. Craig notes that the 1991 mintage of the proof sets is the smallest in the series thus far, with 2,000 Nugget sets and 1,000 Koala sets available worldwide. According to the terms of the money-back guarantee, should a retail customer return the set for any reason, the dealer may return the set to A-Mark by December 31, 1992, and receive a full refund.

For more information about the Australian gold Nuggets and platinum Koalas, contact A-Mark Precious Metals, Inc., 100 Wilshire Blvd., Third Floor, Santa Monica, CA 90401, telephone 213/319-0200.

McMaster University Coin/Print Room a Classic Resource

Ontario, Canada's, McMaster University Art Gallery has long possessed the nucleus of an ancient coin artifact collection. In 1980 the university's Department of Classics sponsored its first series of numismatic lectures and workshops. When several private collections of classical coins were offered on loan to the university through the cooperation of the Chedoke Numismatic Society, it was decided to combine these with the McMaster collection and house them in the art gallery's new Coin/Print Room.

Currently, the Coin/Print Room activities include graduate and undergraduate seminars that show coins in their historical, religious, mythological, artistic, archaeological and sociological contexts. Workshops teach students how to handle and identify ancient coins, and how to use numismatic resources for research purposes. Classroom presentations in schools, special exhibits to complement meetings of scholarly organizations, and thematic exhibits also are part of regular Coin/Print Room activity.

A Man for All Seasons

Paul Whitnah, the recipient of ANA's 1992 Farran Zerbe Memorial Award, collects friends as well as numismatic material.

"DEDICATION AND SERVICE are the keys to Whitnah's interest in everything he does," began the campaign platform that appeared in the June 1977 issue of The Numismatist. Paul R. Whitnah set forth his qualifications to become a member of the Board of Governors of the American Numismatic Association with strength and accuracy.

He didn't win that race, but his campaign promises were faithfully kept—and the real winners of that dedication and service over the last 25 years have been the members of the ANA and those attending the anniversary convention each year.

Some people just collect coins. Paul Whitnah does that, and medals and tokens, too, but he also collects friends. And in more than 30 years of organized numismatics, he has collected many more friends than most.

Those who have visited the convention bourse area at virtually any time during the past quarter century have heard the ever-present Southern drawl booming over the amplifier, telephone-paging or announcing the end of public bourse hours. It's tedious work, with long hours and no pay. But someone has to do it. Many organizations hire professional staff for the purpose—but for more than half his life (and all of his adult life) Whitnah has been the ANA's point of contact at the convention communications center.

His is the first voice that dealers hear in the morning as the show opens each day ("Dealers, man your tables, the public is about to enter") and, he's the one who clears the bourse floor at night before the trained dogs are released ("Time to leave now; the puppies are coming").

The job is considerably harder than it sounds, for it involves not only answering telephones and announcing calls, but often also recognizing the individual a caller is describing. "He's from the Midwest, sort of balding, and buys gold and silver coins . . . but I forget his name."

by David L. Ganz
LM 1072

The Farran Zerbe Memorial Award is the Association's greatest tribute.

DEALERS KNOW A good person when they see one, and Whitnah has been consistently honored by dealer organizations for his outstanding work on their behalf . . .

He also is the person who answers the inquiries knowledgeable collectors find so amusing, if not tiresome, after a news story runs in a local paper about a rarity such as the Bebee 1913 Liberty Head nickel, now in the ANA's world-class museum. "No, ma'am. I understand you have one dated a few years before that. But it's not worth $1 million. Why don't you come over to the show and look at some of the other coins? It's free, you know."

Dealers know a good person when they see one, and Whitnah has been consistently honored by dealer organizations for his outstanding work on their behalf, both as a convention communicator and a travel agent, his current full-time occupation.

Whitnah was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, 45 years ago, the younger son of Erwin A. ("Whit") and Dorothy Whitnah. He has an older brother, Arthur. His birth certificate records that his legal name was Raymond Paul Whitnah, but he switched his middle name for his first, which then promptly became an initial, years ago.

A youthful Paul Whitnah addressed the ANA's 76th Anniversary Convention in Miami, Florida. A sophomore at the University of Arkansas, he was the youngest speaker to present an Educational Forum. His topic was "Youth Program, '67."

IN THE SUMMER of 1964, he opened his own coin shop at the Little Rock airport, a venture that proved interesting if not profitable.

He became interested in coins in 1961 when Dr. Harlan T. Blaine, a local optometrist, showed him some unusual, older American coin issues. "The bug caught me," he recalls. "Dr. Blaine showed me a collection of Lincoln cents and Jefferson nickels, and I found out you could buy and sell them—and make money in the process. I was always looking for a way to make money."

He started collecting Lincoln cents and Jefferson nickels from circulation, and attended his first coin show in Little Rock. Later, type coins became a passion.

He bumped into P.B. Trotter, the well-known Tennessee banker and collector, quite by accident. He saw Trotter reading Coin World in the lobby of the Albert Pike Hotel. It was his first introduction to friendly collectors who were willing to share their knowledge with a neophyte—and like a thirsty mop, he drank up all the information that was proffered, ready to put it to good use.

In the summer of 1964, he opened his own coin shop at the Little Rock airport, a venture that proved interesting if not profitable. Later, he "hung out," as so many young people did, at Nina Willis' coin shop in Little Rock. This selfless dealer imparted to Whitnah an abiding love for the hobby.

From her, aside from keen numismatic knowledge, Whitnah developed an interest in something that Nina Willis collected—love tokens, those unique, engraved coins from a bygone era.

Whitnah's activities with the ANA stretch back to 1965, when he was named one of the first members of the original Young Numismatists Committee by ANA President Matt Rothert, a fellow Arkansan. If the appointment could be deemed local politics, Whitnah more than rose to the occasion. He served as a committee member for more than a decade, even after he became convention communications co-chair in 1969.

Throughout his ANA career, he developed a following and a series of firsts that have helped pave the way for other young collectors. They have been allowed, as Whitnah has, not only to enjoy full membership rights and responsibilities, but also to have a substantive impact on the ANA electoral process and the direction of the organization. Among them:

- Youngest ANA Educational Forum speaker (1967)
- Youngest ANA Board of Governors candidate (1977)
- Youngest ANA committee member (1965)
- First recipient of the ANA Outstanding Adult Advisor Award for young numismatists

At the communications center in Miami in 1974, Whitnah's Southern drawl announced opening and closing times and summoned dealers to answer telephone calls.

BUT WHITNAH FOUND his calling as the “oldest young numismatist.” He began by addressing the Educational Forum in 1967 at Miami . . .

- First associate editor, The Young Numismatist
- Youngest ANA Convention Committee Chair (1969)
- Youngest U.S. Assay Commission appointee (1973), by President Richard Nixon.
- Youngest Chief Assayer of the Old-Time Assay Commissioners Society (OTACS)
- Youngest Numismatic Ambassador Award recipient (1984)

He probably would have been the youngest life member of the ANA, too, but many years earlier past president and current ANA Governor Grover Criswell talked ANA Executive Secretary Lewis Regan into allowing him to join as a life member just before his 18th birthday.

Some 25 years ago, Whitnah began writing “A View from My Window,” a column for The Coin Collector, a Lawrence Brothers periodical. He managed to turn the column into a soapbox for a number of causes, ranging from the ANA’s national youth program to the importance of placing the Josiah Lilly coin collection in the Smithsonian Institution.

Later, he became an associate editor of The Young Numismatist, which the ANA began publishing in the winter of 1971. He wrote for nearly every issue of the quarterly journal until the winter of 1975.

“No convention would be complete without its competitive and non-competitive exhibits,” he noted in the Spring 1972 issue. Making good on this statement, he selflessly served as an exhibit judge in the medallic art category for more than a dozen years.

Those who have judged know that it is a truly thankless job, involving hard work and drudgery for the sole purpose of giving rewards to others. Yet, despite his increasingly difficult work at the ANA convention communications desk, Whitnah always found time to judge exhibits.

When the first ANA young numismatist correspondence course was written, he joined luminaries such as Ken Bressett, Eric Newman, Q. David Bowers and Jim Ruddy as an author. His chapter—“Books, Supplies and Aids to Coin Collecting.”

But Whitnah found his calling as the “oldest young numismatist.” He began by addressing the Educational Forum in 1967 at Miami, and later using “A View from My Window” to ceaselessly remind us all that “juniors, both old and new, are the perpetuation of our hobby.”

Whitnah was a featured speaker at the first and second Summer Seminars conducted at The Colorado College, on whose campus ANA headquarters is located in downtown Colorado Springs. His topic—the YN program.

In 1984, Paul Whitnah and Clyde Hubbard received Krause Publications' Numismatic Ambassador Award.

Much of this activity took place during Whitnah's formative years, while in school at the University of Arkansas. There, in 1967, he became a campus sales representative for American Airlines. After he graduated in 1969, American Airlines was his career choice. His father had made a lifetime career with American that continued until he passed away in 1980.

Flying was Whitnah's first love, and he started as an entry-level passenger services ticket lift agent. At that time, one of the directors of American Airlines was Amon Carter Jr., the Fort Worth newspaper publisher who, coincidentally, was an ANA member and well-known paper money collector in addition to his accomplishments in adding to his father's collection.

Whitnah was probably one of the few entry-level American Airlines employees who knew someone on the corporate board on a first-name basis. At ANA conventions, Whitnah had a regular opportunity to talk with him on a personal level. Soon, he was promoted to flight service director on 747 jumbo jets, and then DC-10s, making transcontinental runs. Later, he became the general manager on the ground in Shreveport, Louisiana, and Phoenix, Arizona.

After more than 20 years with American Airlines, he retired in 1988 and started a second career as a travel agent with M&M Travel Agency, located in Chicago and Arlington, Texas (suburban Dallas-Fort Worth).

As general manager of M&M, he pioneered discounts that were widely used by dealer-members to a variety of coin functions, ranging from the Long Beach shows to ANA conventions. Usually tied to a sponsoring airline (in the beginning, American Airlines had the inside track; lately, it has moved around as the ANA has gone to territories serviced by other carriers), the idea has meant dollars in the pockets of members who use the services.

He also evidenced his dedication to the dealer community by joining the Professional Numismatists Guild as one of its first affiliate members. Today, he holds PNG number AF-440.

A tireless worker, Whitnah has used his skills to benefit all Association members—even if his agency is not involved in the ticketing. At an ANA midwinter convention several years ago in Colorado Springs, the final day was marred by a snowstorm, and an ice storm closed down Dallas, St. Louis and Chicago—exit routes for anyone flying from Colorado to the East Coast.

He re-wrote almost every ticket—hundreds of them—just to help out collectors stranded by the elements. In the process, he added a couple of new friends to his notebook.

Since 1965, he has attended every ANA convention and holds Life Member number 787. Although his father died a dozen years ago, his octogenarian mother is quite active and has attended a number of ANA conventions to share her son's interest.

Whitnah found time to serve as a volunteer at the FIDEM conference held at ANA headquarters in Colorado Springs, as well as a plethora of convention activities. His contributions range from checking out the show site years in advance to planning the communications aspects of each convention.

In the October 1967 installment of "A View from My Window," Whitnah wrote, "If the ANA presented a 'Smile Award,' the recipient would have to be Mrs. Evie Kelley, communications chairman." This year the ANA is recognizing Paul R. Whitnah with a lot more than a Smile Award (he would certainly qualify for that award if there was such a presentation). As the 1992 recipient of the Farran Zerbe Memorial Award, the highest honor the ANA gives to any member, we recognize his dedication and service, and more than a quarter century of friendship. •

ANA Vice President David L. Ganz has served as legislative counsel since 1978. A practicing New York City attorney, he has written hundreds of articles for THE NUMISMATIST and other publications.

United States Mint

The Early Days of the Philadelphia Mint, 1792-95

by R.W. Julian
ANA 29732

Like any new business venture, the fledgling Mint had to contend with a variety of troublesome problems, from personnel and politics to inadequate technology.

George Washington appointed David Rittenhouse, America's foremost scientist, as the first director of the U.S. Mint. Rittenhouse earned fame as the inventor of several precision instruments for astronomical observation.

WHEN EXAMINING THE early coins of the Philadelphia Mint, the modern collector is likely to have little inkling of the many difficulties encountered in their production. It was a process filled with trial and error, but in the end the Mint would become a permanent fixture of American economic life, just as Congress and the President intended on that long-ago day in April 1792 when the first Mint law was passed.

From the beginning, it seemed as though the gods had conspired to create problems where none had existed before. Long before President George Washington signed the Mint Act, he knew that it was only a matter of time before a number of challenges would arise.

His first move, well before the Act's April 2 signing, was to ask David Rittenhouse, the foremost scientist in America, to become the first director of the Mint. Rittenhouse was reluctant to accept because of ill health, but finally informed the President that he would do so, though only on a temporary basis. It was not until July 9 that he formally accepted the position and took the oath of office.

Washington placed the Mint under the overall supervision of the State Department rather than the Treasury, primarily because Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson had previous experience in coinage plans, while Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton was thought to be too busy with other matters.

It fell to Rittenhouse to find a suitable location for a temporary office. John Harper, who had been involved in the New Jersey copper coinage of the 1780s, allowed Rittenhouse to use the basement of a building he owned at 6th and Cherry Streets in Philadelphia.

The director then looked at various properties until he found what he wanted on 7th Street, near Arch. There was an old distillery on the property, but Rittenhouse felt it could be razed easily and the necessary mint structures erected.

It also was clear that steps needed to be taken to obtain copper for coinage. The director arranged with merchants to import sheet copper of a specified thickness from England. It was understood that the importers would take all the risks in exchange for a reasonable return on their money.

Rittenhouse chose Henry Voight (or Voigt) as the first chief coiner, although Jefferson considered the appointment temporary, awaiting the possible hiring of someone more qualified from Europe; Voight did not receive permanent status until January 1793. A watchmaker by trade, his main qualification was his apprenticeship at the mint of Saxe-Gotha in Germany. (Voight had been born in Pennsylvania; his position at the Saxe-Gotha mint almost certainly was arranged by relatives in the old country.)

Another problem, and one that was to cause difficulties until late 1793, was the question of an engraver. It is clear that Rittenhouse, with the approval of the President, had engaged an engraver well before April 2. Just how much before is uncertain, but the arrangement seems to have been made sometime in February or early March 1792.

In one of those quirks that bedevil those researching the early Mint, the last name of the engraver is known with certainty, but not the first. The first cent dies are signed "BIRCH," thus establishing the last name. It is the opinion of this writer that the artist's correct name was William Russell Birch, as has been proposed by Carl W.A. Carlson, but others think that Bob Birch is a better choice.

Whatever the name, the engraver was at work on a pair of cent dies no later than the beginning of March, because the reverse has "G.W. Pr" (representing "George Washington, President") in the exergue. There was considerable debate in Congress about the President's portrait appearing on the coinage, and this concept was rejected before the end of March.

Rittenhouse realized that the cent dies, which may have been created on speculation, were not quite what was wanted, but stuck with the artist as the best available talent. The arrangement with Birch is as uncertain as his first name, as no pay records for engraving work prior to October 1793 have survived. (It should be noted that the original director's warrants exist from the beginning of the Mint. Some small expenses were paid by the chief coiner, but these records are fragmentary.)

By the end of June, Rittenhouse had acquired the 7th Street property and also had set Birch to work on dies for the silver half disme. The dies were completed by early July, and the director requested written permission from the President to begin striking various denominations—the disme, half disme, cent and half cent. However, part of the request was merely a formality, because there was no intention of coining anything but half dismes at the present.

The law required that the chief coiner and assayer be bonded for $10,000 each. Voight did not have that kind of money, while the assayer had yet to be appointed. It seems likely that someone, probably the attorney general, gave the opinion that the presence of Thomas Jefferson or the President at the actual coinage would constitute a legal authority for Rittenhouse to proceed. Whatever the sequence of events, it is clear that coinage was executed about July 12 and that 1,500 half dismes formally were delivered on July 13. Traditionally, Washington is said to have provided some of his old silverware for this first coinage.

At the end of July 1792, Chief Coiner Voight superintended the demolition of the old distillery. With appropriate ceremony, the foundation stone was laid for the first building erected under the new United States government. This was the "shop," soon to be the headquarters and working area for the chief coiner. Shortly afterward, work began on the front two buildings. (These two buildings, which faced 7th Street, were erected side-by-side and in existing views appear as one building.)

Work went so quickly on the shop that the Mint staff was able to move in early in September, pending the completion of the front buildings. Voight was very busy and responsible for the necessary machinery. Some of the equipment had been purchased, such as the three coining presses that arrived toward the end of September, but other machines had to be constructed from scratch, using the knowledge Voight had acquired in Germany.

There was a shortage of nearly everything. When Voight needed copper to make gears and other parts for his new machines, he had to advertise for it in the local papers. Modern numismatists have assumed that these purchases were for pattern coins, which may in part be true, but that was not the original intention.

The most difficult pieces of equipment to construct were the rolling machines that flattened the ingots of metal to the point that blanks of the correct thickness could be punched out. The rollers had to be purchased, but the rest of the machinery was fabricated under Voight's supervision. Gears repeatedly failed, an ongoing problem in the first two decades of the Mint.

Throughout 1792, the Mint still experienced problems with the engraver. Birch clearly had created the first pair of cent dies, and his crude style is unmistakable on both sides of the half disme and the reverse of the disme, indicating a possible order of die-sinking:

- 1) Cent reverse, February-March 1792
- 2) Cent obverse, April-May
- 3) Half disme, June-July
- 4) Disme reverse, June-July

Why the engraver failed to finish the disme dies is unknown. He apparently ground down the old cent dies, which probably were not hardened originally (the only known specimen is in soft metal), and re-engraved them in much the same form, but with certain changes, primarily omitting reference to the President.

Specimens seemed to have been struck from the revised cent dies on occasion from September to December. At some point, probably in the fall of 1792, the obverse of the disme was completed. The artwork is clearly better than that on the half disme, and for this reason some researchers have suggested that another artist was responsible. Only two artists are likely at this point: Adam Eckfeldt and Henry Voight. Eckfeldt was a sometime blacksmith who worked occasionally for the early Mint until he became assistant coiner in 1796—and chief coiner in 1814.

Eckfeldt's name has been put forth and may well be correct. The question arises, however, why he was not appointed as engraver if he was that good at cutting dies. The engraver's post paid several times that of assistant coiner, which he did not obtain until January 1796. On the other hand, Voight is known to have made the first cent dies in 1793, as well as the dies for the silver-center cent, and must be considered a strong candidate for the disme obverse.

Toward the end of 1792, Rittenhouse was faced with yet another difficulty, that of rising copper prices. By law the cent was to weigh 264 grains (17.11 grams), but if cents and half cents were struck on the legal standard, the government would lose money. He considered striking the full cent anyway (patterns using the revised Birch dies are known to have been struck in December 1792), but also tried the plan proposed by Voight.

Voight thought that a cent with a silver center (similar in concept to the modern Italian bimetallic pieces) not only would be hard to counterfeit, but also would be easy to strike. Voight cut the dies, but it was soon realized that mechanical difficulties would make it impossible to coin cents in quantity. The idea was abandoned after a few patterns were struck. (Billon, a mixture of silver and copper, also was considered and rejected.)

The Chain design on the reverse of the first cent coinage was intended to represent the strength of the new union, but many viewed it as a reminder of the colonial past. Lady Liberty appeared in a fright, the result of Voight's inexperienced hand.

Voight, perhaps with Eckfeldt's assistance, redesigned the cent in 1793, resulting in the replacement of the chain with a wreath.

The model for the Liberty head on the half cent (left) is uncertain, but the Liberty Cap cent of 1793 was clearly patterned after the obverse of the Libertas Americana medal (right) struck in France in the 1780s.

After Rittenhouse consulted with Secretary of State Jefferson, the Administration introduced a bill in Congress to lower the weight of the cent to 208 grains (13.48 grams). The change was approved by Congress on January 14, 1793.

Although he now had the green light for coinage, Rittenhouse still was faced with the problem of finding a qualified engraver. Henry Voight agreed to serve in that capacity until someone more capable was found. After the designs had been approved by Rittenhouse, Jefferson and Washington, the chief coiner engraved the dies as best he could. (The designer of the coins is unknown, but it may have been Rittenhouse.)

The choice of a chain motif for the reverse, based on a similar design found on the 1776 Continental Dollar and the 1787 Fugio cent, proved to be a mistake. The chain was supposed to represent the strength of the new union, but many saw it as a reminder of the colonial past. In addition, Liberty appeared to be in a fright, a result of Voight's inexperience in engraving.

It seems likely that a first-strike ceremony for the new cents was held on February 22, Washington's birthday. (His interest in the coinage was well known, and what better way to honor the President?) A few days later, regular coinage commenced, and the first Chain cents were formally delivered on March 1, with the last delivery being made on March 12. In all, 36,103 Chain cents were struck.

The uproar over the first cent design sent the government back to the drawing board. A wreath, derived from the Birch and silver-center cents, replaced the chain, and a better Liberty was prepared for the obverse. Again, Voight was the engraver, but it has been suggested that he was aided by Adam Eckfeldt.

The "Flowing Hair" cents with the wreath reverse were first struck in early April and continued to be made until July. The revised design, while far from ideal, showed that the government was capable of responding to criticism and that Voight was becoming more skilled in his engraving. However, the quality of work he could produce was limited.

In late April 1793, Rittenhouse ordered preparation of the half cent coinage to begin, and by the middle of May more than 30,000 planchets had been readied, even as far as lettering the edges. After all the troubles with Voight and the dies, however, he decided that someone else should engrave the dies. The planchets were then stored for two months until the dies were ready.

Sometime in late June or early July 1793, Joseph Wright, the famed artist, agreed to be engraver on a part- or full-time basis; the details of his employment, as well as the exact date he began, are unknown. (There are no Mint pay records in his name, but it is known that Rittenhouse had the annoying habit—at least as far as modern researchers are concerned—of paying for certain expenses out of his personal funds.)

Wright first completed dies for the half cent, and coinage duly began in late July. The model for the Liberty head on the half cent is uncertain, but that for the Liberty Cap cent of 1793, also engraved by Wright, is not. The head was clearly modeled on the obverse of the famous Libertas Americana medal, struck in France in the 1780s at the direct order of Benjamin Franklin to commemorate the end of the Revolutionary War.

It has been suggested that Adam Eckfeldt cut the half cent dies, but this is unlikely. He may have helped with the wreath on the reverse, but Wright's claim to the obverse seems secure. Had Eckfeldt been capable of superior work, then he, not someone else, would have been named engraver. Also, the striking of half cents would not have been delayed from May to July; Eckfeldt was clearly available, as he was then blacksmithing for the Mint.

With the arrival of Joseph Wright, it is likely that Rittenhouse felt his search for a good engraver was over. Unfortunately, Wright was a victim of bad timing—he died in mid September of yellow fever. The Mint was forced to close just after the artist's death and did not reopen until late November. (Wright was replaced by Robert Scot, who served until his death in November 1823.)

At the end of 1793, Rittenhouse was concerned with resuming the cent and half cent coinage. Many valuable lessons had been learned during the year, and these were put to good use in 1794 as Mint workmen struck large numbers of cents. Half cents were coined in lesser quantities because of smaller public demand.

Rittenhouse was determined to begin coinage of gold and silver as soon as possible, but his efforts were thwarted by the high bond requirements

The Draped Bust design was introduced during Boudinot's first year as Mint director.

Elias Boudinot was appointed by the House of Representatives in 1794 to investigate the public's complaints against the Mint. Upon the resignation of Mint Director Henry DeSaussure the following year, Boudinot was named to fill the vacancy.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE ANA

This is a copy of a sign I had at my table during the 100th ANA Convention last year. I believe it is extremely important for every member to see it and reflect about it. Here it is again as a paid advertisement. It is my hope that it will serve a constructive purpose.

- BIG ISSUES TO BE CONFRONTED BY ANA IN THE FUTURE THROUGH NEW OR IMPROVED ATTITUDES: INTRODUCTION OR REINTRODUCTION OF PEOPLE INTERESTED IN OUR HOBBY, young people as well as others. I just read that a recently-conducted poll indicated that only 10.9% of Coin World readers receive The Numismatist. Why is the other 89.1% indifferent about the ANA? What are we not doing or doing wrong?
- ENCOURAGEMENT TO INCREASE ACTIVE INVOLVEMENT BY OUR MEMBERSHIP (THROUGH POSITIVE RESPONSE, ETC.) All new ideas and/or proposals will avoid stagnation and the chance that a small group doing all the work consequently will have to make all decisions.
- GREATER INVOLVEMENT BY MINORITIES IN OUR ASSOCIATION. Following are some excerpts from letters I sent some time ago: "... I had read during the last year in The Numismatist the names of each and every one of the members of our Board of Governors, corporate officers, special officers, appointed officers and staff. . . " and it seemed to me that none of them belong to a minority. "... how many blacks or Latin Americans do you see occupying tables at our conventions? . . . "

Let us not be shallow, ignoring responsibilities toward all American minorities, even though we may tend to put some or all the blame on them for most of the problems they face. Doing so will only prolong the integration process, at the end of which, hopefully, we will all share our obligations in a stronger, more integrated society. At that point, there will be no need or justification for anybody to claim he/she has been left behind. However many years the process may take, every one of us should contribute to it. Claiming now that minorities' ills are their own fault is like blaming Jews for the Holocaust. It is human nature to resist change. But let's face it folks. Sooner or later, like it or not, we will have to integrate in 21st-century America. If we do not, somebody will do it for us.

- AMERICA (ANA) 1991 IS NOT THE SAME AS AMERICA (ANA) 1891:

Take a look at the program for the 100th ANA convention. Look at pages 21, 22 and 23. Everyone pictured (except one person) is a non-minority ANA manager. There is a potential market among the minority population, a fact we can no longer neglect. We should start education, immediately realizing that passiveness in this respect should be over by now. Acceptance of this fact would not only benefit the ANA, but America, as well—that is you, me and our descendants. I do not believe 100% in quotas, but E PLURIBUS UNUM should be implemented at the ANA somehow.

- DIVERSIFYING, WITHOUT LIBERALIZING OUT OF CONTROL, THE TYPE OF MATERIAL ON DISPLAY AND FOR SALE AT OUR CONVENTIONS. After all, we have the ANS for strictly non-commercial purposes, even though I was never able to obtain a clear set of rules and regulations as to how they dispose of their unwanted donations (or should I say duplicates) and how they choose auctioneers or buyers for them. (Believe me, folks, I asked.)

- CONSUMER PROTECTION

Something has to be done to keep everybody happy. I think current economics and market conditions are ideal for a development on this subject. Otherwise, we may be accused of being accomplices of the dealers, who, as ANA members, could take advantage of our lack of action. Not everybody wants to be or can be a PNG member. Therefore, I do not think we should look to them for an answer. Many people lost lots of money by thinking of our hobby as a Wall Street investment. We must constantly go on record as to collecting, investing, accumulating, etc.

- PROMOTE THE WORLD OUTREACH OF ANA

Nowadays geopolitical changes allow us to take advantage of modern forms of communication, reducing old time/distance concepts to a fraction. This situation could very well be used to advance and promote our principles in today's world. A windfall of this attitude may be the gaining of knowledge applicable to every aspect of our hobby and benefitting the whole world.

- REVIEW OF THE "POINT SYSTEM" USED TO ADJUDICATE PREFERENTIAL BOURSE SPACE AT CONVENTIONS

We must avoid the preponderance of passive seniority over active yearly achievements benefiting the ANA by individuals or companies. We must not allow money to be the most recognized form of help. Doing so could keep a large number of members inactive because their economic inability to help might create the erroneous thought that material donations or other forms of donations to the ANA, such as time or accomplishing any kind of work on behalf of the ANA, would not be rewarded. We must not alienate anybody willing to help the ANA. Any proper adjustment, clarification, remainder or anything else will be an incentive for some of our longtime members to keep their motivation toward continuously helping the ANA and eliminating any possibility of misunderstandings, particularly about favoritism.

- LET'S HAVE A BETTER ANA . . . THE BEST, THE BIGGEST AND THE GREATEST FOR THE NEXT 100 YEARS AND BEYOND . . .

Members, I still have left from the ANA's 100th Anniversary convention a number of replicas of our beloved Statue of Liberty (12½ inches tall) to give away free of charge to anybody who becomes a new member under my sponsorship. If you know of anybody who wishes to join, please send for my application and redemption coupon. Quantities are limited. Even if only a small number of you answer, we could do the ANA and ourselves a big favor. PLEASE participate.

I.P.S. I am fully aware that some of my opinions expressed here could be controversial and they may cost me business, but they have good intentions toward the ANA and no offense was intended. Although I wrote them almost a year ago, they are still valid today.

Dollar Dilemma

Our Founding Fathers discovered that selecting a monetary unit for the newly formed United States of America was no easy matter.

by William S. Snyder
ANA 137208

Concerning the problems resulting from the lack of a national coinage, George Washington said, "A man must travel with a pair of scales in his pocket or run the risk of receiving gold at one-fourth less."

IT IS NOT mere chance that the dollar is the unit of account in the United States. If not for a determined effort by men like Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson, we could just as easily be paying for everything with quints, marks, or the copper denarius that circulated in colonial Maryland.

In our country's formative years, George Washington summed up the feelings of many of his countrymen concerning the lack of a national coinage when he said, "A man must travel with a pair of scales in his pocket or run the risk of receiving gold at one-fourth less."

The situation was so bad that exchange almanacs were published regularly, such as the 1785 edition of the "Philadelphia Directory," which included "A valuable, regular, and well calculated Table of Dollars, Crowns, French and English Guineas, with other coins, suitable for any state . . ."

Without a coinage of its own, the United States could do little else but rely on the dollar-sized coins of other countries as a medium of exchange. Especially important in this role was the Spanish milled dollar. It was so well known and generally accepted that it purportedly was used by the Congress to back the disastrous issues of paper money during the Revolutionary War.

As has often been the case in human affairs, disparity in views and attitudes result in bitter, prolonged controversy—the birth of the American dollar was no exception. After the Revolution, the state of affairs regarding a national coinage was only slightly better than complete chaos. Various issues of the colonies circulated side by side with an amazing variety of foreign coins, including gold, silver and copper from England, France, Germany, Spain and Portugal.

Many people wanted to retain the familiar English system of pounds and shillings. Others, such as Robert Morris (often referred to as the "financier of the American Revolution"), proposed a coinage system of marks, quints and cents, the mark being equal to 1,000 units. Thomas Jefferson correctly recognized Morris' proposal as unwieldy and cumbersome, recommending instead that the Spanish dollar serve as the basis for a national coinage, and citing its familiarity and wide acceptance.

THOMAS JEFFERSON CORRECTLY RECOGNIZED Morris' proposal as unwieldy and cumbersome, recommending instead that the Spanish dollar serve as the basis . . .

Before and after the Revolution, Americans were faced with a confusing variety of coinage—colonial issues circulated alongside coins from foreign nations.

Alexander Hamilton also favored the dollar and a decimal system, and, as Secretary of the Treasury in 1791, his opinions carried a great deal of weight. In preparing an extensive report to the House of Representatives "On the Establishment of a Mint," Hamilton had shown a great deal of interest in the foreign coins then circulating in the United States, especially those of dollar size. Writing to William Seton at the Bank of New York in December 1790, he asked for very specific information as to the types of dollars in circulation, their dates and exact weights. This information was vital not only to fixing a current value for foreign dollars and crowns, but also to establishing the specifications of a proposed American dollar.

The Coinage Act of 1792 distilled Hamilton's report, along with a great deal of other information, into some concrete proposals that specified the use of "Dollars or units—each to be of the value of a Spanish milled dollar as the same is now current . . ."

In 1794 the United States finally began producing a silver dollar coin. However, the first issues were of such low mintage that they were ineffec-

Robert Morris, who is known for his role in financing the American Revolution, proposed a coinage system based on marks, quints and cents.

“ . . . there can be no doubt, the new terms and divisions into tens will presently become familiar, and are the most excellent for ready and correct reckoning . . . ”

Thomas Jefferson believed that the national coinage should be based on the Spanish dollar because it was familiar and widely accepted.

The Coinage Act of 1792 contained proposals distilled from information in a report by Alexander Hamilton, who favored a decimal system with the dollar as the monetary standard.

tual in filling the vast demand. In many ways, the first silver coins of the newly established Philadelphia Mint represented the culmination of a great deal of effort by many people over a long period of time. But, they do not tell the whole story of the early dollar legislation and the private citizens who took a keen interest in what they rightly considered a matter of great importance.

That concern is reflected in the writings of John Beale Bordley, whose 1789 essay, “On Monies, Coins, Weights, and Measures, Proposed for the United States of America,” advocated a decimal system for American coins. Quoting this essay, numismatic book dealer George Kolbe explains Bordley’s proposal:

“The division of monies of account and coin into tenths is wonderfully convenient.” [Bordley] goes on to propose a “dollar of 357 grains fine, and 29 grains of alloy” so that it would be equal in value to a “standard Spanish dollar” and “50d. sterling.” He notes that “It is not surprising that objections should be made, by simple people, to the change of terms from pounds, shillings, and pence, to dollars, dimes, and cents—but, there can be no doubt, the new terms and divisions into tens will presently become familiar, and are the most excellent for ready and correct reckoning, to the learned as well as the unlearned.” Betraying his agricultural background, Bordley proposes the following design for a silver dollar coin: “Its device may be a full wooled sheep, implying a fleece—a great national object! A sheaf or a field of wheat may also be in view . . .” He goes on to discuss fineness, the ratio of the value of gold versus silver, coining costs, etc. . .

A great deal of research remains to be done on how public opinion such as Bordley’s influenced the shaping of early coinage policy. Whatever the effects of that influence, those early decisions spawned a national coinage that forms the collecting foundation for numismatists the world over. •

The March of the Silver Dollar

Popular and diverse, United States dollar coinage has earned an honored place in the annals of numismatic history.

by Michael Hodder
ANA 104582

FROM ITS INTRODUCTION in 1794 to today, the dollar coin has been more than just a useful medium of exchange. Its numismatic history, changing design types, continued popularity and ultimate fate reflect our nation's growth from a handful of colonies hugging the eastern seaboard to the world's greatest superpower. This pictorial essay, written in celebration of the bicentennial of the United States Mint, describes some of the changes in the dollar's illustrious past.

Pillar Dollar

THE SPANISH 8 reales, or "piece of eight," was the American colonies' first silver dollar-sized coin. Struck at several Latin American mints, the 8 reales maintained its weight and silver content with few changes. Its stability as a coinage medium made it a credible coin for American commerce. In many colonies it was valued at 8 English shillings.

Making change for one of these dollars was easy—the coin could be cut into eight sections, each one called a "bit" and worth 1 shilling. The old refrain "two bits, four bits, six bits, a dollar" originated because this division became so common. Later, when the United States adopted a decimal system in which 100 cents equaled 1 dollar, the "bit" became worth the equivalent of 12½ cents. We still speak of things priced at a quarter as costing "two bits" ("Shave and a haircut, two bits.").

The Spanish dollar was legal tender in the United States until 1857, and in some parts of the country it was the only large silver coin ever seen, even as late as the 1880s. The obverse shows the two hemispheres of the earth between the Pillars of Hercules (the two rocks on either side of the Strait of Gibraltar), the wavy lines below symbolizing the great oceans of the world. The reverse bears the crowned arms of the Spanish kingdom.

Spanish "pillar" dollar

THE "DOLLARS" HAVE a strong claim to being the first silver dollars ever struck in North America and are coins of the highest historic and numismatic value.

.....

Continental Dollar

A GREAT DEAL of mystery still surrounds the Continental Currency coinage of 1776, popularly called the "Continental Dollar." These coins were first struck in the summer of 1776, probably in New York City before the British occupation. They were struck in silver, brass and pewter.

The extremely rare silver specimens may have served as dollars, and the very rare brass pieces as large pennies. The purpose of the more common pewter pieces is unknown. The "dollars" have a strong claim to being the first silver dollars ever struck in North America and are coins of the highest historic and numismatic value. Very few silver and brass pieces seem to have been made, however, and their impact on commerce was probably minimal.

The piece illustrated here has an additional inscription below the sundial reading EG FECIT, meaning someone whose initials were EG "made this." The reverse shows 13 interlocked links of an endless chain, each bearing the name of one of the original colonies. In the chain's center, the words WE/ARE/ONE are surrounded by the inscription AMERICAN CONGRESS. Although each colony was a separate political unit, they were all united in the Continental Congress. The chain motif later appeared on the 1787 Fugio cents and the first large cents of 1793.

"Flowing Hair" Type

THE YEAR 1794 marks the issuance of the first federal union dollar. Designed by Robert Scot, the "Flowing Hair" type was struck in 1794 and 1795 only. The obverse shows Liberty facing right, with her hair flowing freely down her neck. In many ways, the design reflects the exuberant spirit of newly won independence coursing through the land.

The reverse is of the "Small Eagle" type, showing the bird with outstretched wings standing within a wreath of laurel leaves, symbolizing victory. Around the rim is inscribed UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

"Draped Bust" Type

IN 1795 THE obverse of the dollar was changed. Modeled after a design by Gilbert Stuart, a fashionable portrait painter of the day, the new design features a more sedate and dignified Liberty.

A draped Miss Liberty faces to the right, but now the upper portion of her hair is tied with a ribbon, the lower curls flowing freely down her back. The reverse still bears the "Small Eagle" design.

"Heraldic Eagle" Type

GILBERT STUART'S OBERSE design was maintained until 1803, the last year Bust dollars were struck for circulation purposes. A new reverse debuted in 1798, with a heraldic eagle adapted from the Great Seal of the United States.

The eagle still has outstretched wings, but it now faces to the left. More importantly, it no longer resembles a living bird; rather it has been glorified, transformed into a creature symbolic of the strength and power of the new nation. On its breast is the Union shield, and in its talons are the arrows of war and the laurel branch of peace, showing that America is prepared both for war or peace (the symbolism likely was derived from antiquity).

ALTHOUGH THE 1804 dollar resembles the 1798-1803 circulation issues, it was not struck until 1834-35. New dies were made based on the older types, and a very small number of dollars dated 1804 were officially struck at the Mint for diplomatic gifts.

Several decades later, additional 1804 dollars were clandestinely struck at the Mint for sale to collectors. The 1834-35 issues are known as Class I dollars, while those struck later are referred to as Class II or III. Only Class I dollars are official Mint products. Because of its great rarity and desirability, the 1804 silver dollar has earned the title "King of American Coins."

Gobrecht Dollar

BETWEEN 1804 AND 1836, no silver dollars were struck. In the latter year, Mint Engraver Christian Gobrecht was given the task of designing a new dollar coin. Drawing on the work of Titian Peale, a prominent artist of the day, Gobrecht designed an obverse motif that has been called the most beautiful ever to adorn our nation's coinage.

Since 1794, the obverse of the dollar had borne a rendition of Liberty facing right. Gobrecht completely rethought the traditional type and created a new design that showed Liberty seated to the right, looking back over her right shoulder. The design suggests that America faces the future with an eye on the past. Liberty is seated on a large rock, symbolic of stability.

On issues intended for circulation, the base of the rock is inscribed C. GOBRECHT F. (meaning "C. Gobrecht made this"). The original design called for Gobrecht's name to be featured more prominently, but public criticism led to the present treatment.

Liberty's left hand supports the Union shield draped with a scroll inscribed LIBERTY. Her right hand loosely holds a pole surmounted by a liberty cap, symbolizing freedom. Below the rock is the date. No other inscriptions or elements appear on the obverse, giving the design a free, uncluttered appearance.

The reverse also was redesigned. The Heraldic Eagle was abandoned in favor of a more realistic bird (actually modeled after the Mint's stuffed eagle, "Peter"). The new type shows an eagle flying upward to the left against a background of large and small stars. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA is inscribed above, and, for the first time in the denomination's history, its value was proclaimed, spelled out along the bottom as ONE DOLLAR.

One thousand examples of Gobrecht's design were struck in December 1836; early the following year, another 600 were coined and dated 1836. In 1839 the design was modified, and approximately 300 dollars were struck. The stars were removed from the reverse and placed in a semicircle around Liberty's seated figure. Gobrecht's name was entirely removed from the obverse. The revised obverse design became the standard for the dollar issues of 1840-73.

"Seated Liberty" Type

STARTING IN 1840, the Mint began issuing larger quantities of silver dollars for general circulation. The obverse design was Gobrecht's, seen earlier on the 1836 and 1839 issues. Some additional modifications had been made to Liberty, however. The base of the rock on which she sat was rendered more compact, and her clothing was accentuated, with more drapery added below her left elbow. The semicircle of stars added to Gobrecht's original design for the 1839 issue became an integral part of the 1840-73 silver dollars.

The reverse of the new Seated Liberty dollar represented a new design. In place of Gobrecht's flying eagle is a perched eagle with its wings partially folded, grasping a bundle of arrows in its left talon and an olive branch in its right. On its breast is the Union shield with UNITED STATES OF AMERICA inscribed above and the denomination ONE DOL. below. These same obverse and reverse types also were adopted for the half dollar, while the Seated Liberty obverse type alone appeared on minor silver coins.

pressive of religious beliefs were considered for inclusion on our nation's coinage. The motto finally adopted was IN GOD WE TRUST, which was added to the reverse of the silver dollar in 1866. It appears emblazoned on a long, wavy scroll above the eagle's head. (The motto can be found on U.S. dollar coins to this day, including the American Eagle silver bullion coin.)

Trade Dollar

THE TRADE DOLLAR was first issued in 1873 and was struck for overseas circulation through 1878, primarily at the San Francisco Mint. They were intended to circulate in the Far East and India, competing with the Mexican silver peso and other dollar-sized coins. Originally, the Trade dollar was considered legal tender in the United States, but its status as such was repealed in 1876.

From 1878 until 1883, Trade dollars were struck for collectors only. The 1884 proofs were struck privately from official Mint dies; the 1885 proofs were clandestine issues. Trade dollars were demonetized in 1887.

The obverse of this export dollar shows Liberty seated to the left upon a bale of cotton, against which leans a sheaf of wheat. In her right hand she holds an olive branch symbolic of peace, which she extends out to sea as an offering of friendship to foreign lands. Her left hand holds a scroll inscribed LIBERTY.

The reverse bears a rather clumsy eagle clasp ing a bundle of arrows and an olive branch in its talons. As an aid to foreign bankers, the statutory weight and silver fineness of the issue appears below. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA and E PLURIBUS UNUM are above, with TRADE DOLLAR below.

Morgan Dollar

AFTER THE TRADE dollar was revoked, there were no further issues of silver dollars for general circulation until 1878. In that year, George T. Morgan's design for a new dollar coin was introduced to the public. The new issue received a mixed reception, with most numismatic writers condemning it as ugly. The public, however, accepted the coin quite readily, and Western silver interests were overjoyed at the prospect of a renewed market for their mines' output.

The obverse of Morgan's design shows Liberty facing left. Round-cheeked and matronly, she lacks the grace of earlier depictions. Her hair is drawn up into a liberty cap adorned with a wreath of leaves and cotton bolls. The reverse depicts an eagle in standard form, grasping a bundle of arrows and a laurel branch. The eagle's less than skillful rendering gave rise to the issue's unfavorable nickname "buzzard dollar."

More Morgan dollars were produced from 1878 to 1921 than almost any other denomination. With only a few exceptions, individual dates are not rare or scarce.

THE PEACE DOLLAR was struck with some regularity from 1921 to 1928, although mintages after 1926 were small compared to earlier years or Morgan dollar production.

Peace Dollar

THE INSPIRATION FOR the new issue of silver dollars commemorating the end of the First World War came from noted numismatist Farran Zerbe. He had been instrumental in the issuance of the gold and silver coins for the 1915 Panama-Pacific Exposition and felt that a new dollar coin honoring the end of the war was a good idea.

Congress finally went along with his plan, and Anthony De Francisci was commissioned to draw the designs. De Francisci created his coin with a higher relief than usual, and the first year's issue in 1921 featured a distinctly medallionic appearance. After 1922, however, the relief was lowered to accommodate the Mint's coin presses, giving numismatists two varieties to collect.

The obverse of the second type shows a finely drawn bust of Liberty facing left, wearing a coronet of sun rays. Her hair streams out along her face as if she faces the winds of change. The reverse shows an eagle standing on a rocky crag gazing off into the distance. It clasps a laurel branch, but not a bundle of arrows, signifying its peaceful intentions. At the base of the crag is the word PEACE, from which we derive the dollar's name.

The Peace dollar was struck with some regularity from 1921 to 1928, although mintages after 1926 were small compared to earlier years or Morgan dollar production. No silver dollars were coined from 1929 to 1933; however, the series was resumed in 1934-35, after which production of the Peace dollar was finally halted.

In 1964 legislation called for the minting of 45 million silver dollars, and 316,076 silver dollars subsequently were produced at the Denver Mint bearing De Francisci's Peace design and the date 1964. Plans for the coinage were abandoned shortly thereafter, and all the coins were melted.

Eisenhower Dollar

IN 1971 A new dollar coin having a copper-nickel composition was introduced. Designed by Frank Gasparro, the obverse bears a left-facing bust of President Dwight David Eisenhower in memory of the great commander-in-chief. The reverse features a laurel-bearing eagle alighting on the surface of the moon, commemorating man's first lunar landing. The Eisenhower dollar was struck from 1971-74 and again from 1977-78. Special silver-clad issues were struck at the San Francisco Mint from 1971-74.

Bicentennial Dollar

TO COMMEMORATE THE bicentennial of the Declaration of Independence, a new reverse design was introduced for the Eisenhower dollar. In place of the lunar eagle, the Liberty Bell was superimposed upon a larger drawing of the moon. The new type, struck in 1976 only, also was copper-nickel clad; a special silver-clad issue was coined in San Francisco.

Susan B. Anthony Dollar

THE SHORT-LIVED AND much maligned Susan B. Anthony (SBA) dollar was struck to commemorate the suffragette's role in the Women's movement. Designed by Frank Gasparro, the obverse features a severe, right-facing portrait of Anthony; the reverse was borrowed from Gasparro's earlier design for the Eisenhower dollar.

Unlike prior silver dollars, all of which were 38.1mm in diameter, the SBA dollar (or "Susie") measured 26.5mm. Despite attempts to differentiate the new coin by giving the inside rim a multi-faceted design, Susie caused public confusion, as it was only slightly larger than the 25-cent piece and only slightly smaller than the half dollar.

The Susan B. Anthony dollar was produced with the best intentions, but the worst results. The Treasury maintains stocks of tens of millions of unreleased SBA dollars.

Commemorative Silver Dollars

THE FIRST COMMEMORATIVE silver dollar was issued in 1900 and bears the portraits of President Washington and General Lafayette. No commemorative dollars were struck again until 1983, when the Mint renewed its commemorative coinage program.

What followed was a continuous flow of commemorative issues, beginning with two $1 coins marking the XXIII Olympiad in Los Angeles. Silver dollars have since been struck honoring the Statue of Liberty/Ellis Island (1986); the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution (1987); the XXIV Olympiad in Seoul, South Korea (1988); the bicentennial of Congress (1989); the 100th anniversary of the birth of President Dwight D. Eisenhower (1990); the 50th anniversary of Mount Rushmore (1991); the 38th anniversary of the end of the Korean War (1991); the 50th anniversary of the USO (1991); and the XXV Olympiad in Barcelona, Spain (1992).

American Eagle Bullion Coin

ALTHOUGH DENOMINATED "ONE dollar," the American Eagle is a bullion coin containing 1 ounce of silver. Introduced in 1986, its intrinsic value far exceeds its face value; consequently, even though it is legal tender, it does not circulate as a dollar coin. •

Earliest American Numismatic Articles

A happy rediscovery of numismatic imprints sheds light on the earliest knowledge in this country about American coins and medals.

by Eric P. Newman
LM 619

THE EARLIEST PIECE of numismatic literature published in America about American coins has remained virtually unknown. While it was preceded by several publications about American medals, the idea of making the detail and history of American coins available for study was slow to develop. In determining what is a numismatic publication—as distinguished from what was printed in the course of planning, producing, distributing or circulating coinage, paper money or medals—there is a blurred line and opinions may vary as to classification. However, the beginnings of American numismatic literature reveal some curious and unusual printed articles.

Modern numismatic bibliophiles have generally accepted the earliest American publication of a truly numismatic nature as Joseph B. Felt's An Historical Account of Massachusetts Currency (Boston, 1839). Jacob R. Eckfeldt and William E. DuBois reached an American numismatic pinnacle soon thereafter when they wrote A Manual of Gold and Silver Coins of All Nations (Philadelphia, 1842).

American Publications Not Intended as Numismatic Literature

THE FIRST AMERICAN publication concerning coins as collectibles was printed by B. Franklin and D. Hall in 1757 and is a list of 42 Roman coins (referred to as medals) held by the Library Company of Philadelphia. Another inventory of these and many additional numismatic holdings was published by that library in 1807. Included were four Massachusetts shillings, one Massachusetts 6 pence, one Chalmers' 6 pence and five American medals, as well as European and Asiatic coins and medals. These listings contained only simple data describing the pieces.

According to David Humphreys in his 1787 letter to The American Museum, American Revolutionary War medals were officially awarded to instill patriotism, recognize and celebrate heroic achievement, encourage emulation, and memorialize people and events. In its August 1787 issue, that magazine published Humphreys' letter along with a description of the devices and inscriptions on medals for George Washington, Horatio Gates and Nathaniel Greene. Other medals were mentioned, but not described.

. . . [HE] COMMENTED THAT he had not seen any published description of those medals and that there existed a "practice of depositing them in the cabinets of the curious."

Robert Morris, Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin had worked with Humphreys in the planning and preparation of these awards, and additional examples were arranged for diplomatic gifts and other purposes. In his letter, Humphreys also commented that he had not seen any published description of those medals and that there existed a "practice of depositing them in the cabinets of the curious." Thus he recognized the need for numismatic literature about medals.

The meaning of the emblems and Latin mottoes on the first Continental Currency paper money issue dated May 10, 1775, was not generally understood by the public, and an explanation and translation was first published in the Pennsylvania Gazette of September 20, 1775, and followed in the Pennsylvania Magazine of December 1775. Many other publications of matters concerning American paper money (governmental and bank notes) during the 18th and early 19th centuries related to its value, legal-tender status, depreciation, counterfeiting, redemption and other economic features, but did not involve the study of it. A historic summary of these topics was published by William M. Gouge in Paper Money and Banking in the United States (Philadelphia, 1833, etc.) and is not intended to be numismatic.

Writings covering the planning of coinage for the United States written by Benjamin Franklin, Robert Morris, Thomas Jefferson, Alexander Hamilton, Robert Beale Bordley, Thomas Paine and others examined the establishment of coinage standards for the United States and were not of numismatic intent.

In 1789 Bordley specifically named Virginia halfpence, Nova Constellatio coppers, English halfpence circulating in America (both genuine and counterfeit), and other foreign copper money used in America, but only as a basis for planning copper coinage for the United States. His publication On Monies, Coins, Weights, and Measures (Philadelphia, 1789) also included specie coinage suggestions and was followed by a 1790 supplement.

The early publication in America of exchange calculation matters in books, almanacs, pamphlets, tables and newspapers, as well as arithmetical and accountancy instruction books, were for commercial purposes and only incidentally provide some numismatic information. U.S. Mint Reports

In his 1789 work On Monies, Coins, Weights, and Measures, Robert Beale Bordley included suggestions for specie coinage.

Old American Coins

Written by James Mease in 1838, "Old American Coins" is the first numismatic article about U.S. coins published in this country.

[The following account of some American coins, issued before the establishment of the present government, by some of the States, was furnished by Doctor JAMES MEASE, of Philadelphia.]

No. 1. This coin is larger than a half cent. On one side it has thirteen ribs or bars which run parallel to, and are equi-distant from each other. On the other side are the letters U.S.A. the S. being of larger size, running across the other two letters. It has no date nor any other inscription.

No. 2. On one side a head surrounded by "Georgius. Dei. Gratia. Rex." On the other side is a rose and the following inscription, "Rosa. Americana. Utile. Dulci. 1722."

No. 3. On one side a chain of thirteen circular links running around the face of the coin. In the centre a circle, having upon it the words "We are one," and around these words, "United States." On the other side there is a sun at meridian height, looking down upon a dial, beneath which appear these words, "Mind your business." The word "Fugio", and the date 1787 also appear on the same side of the coin.

No. 4. On one side the American Eagle, having on its breast a shield, with the word CENT upon it. Around the face of the Coin is "MASSACHUSETTS 1788." On the other side is an Indian at full length with his bow and arrow, and the word COMMONWEALTH.

No. 5. On one side a sheaf of wheat, and the words "PEACE AND PLENTY;" on the other, a full length portrait of Fame blowing her trumpet, and these words "FOR THE CONVENIENCE OF THE PUBLIC." There is a date upon it, but the third figure is so badly done, as to leave a doubt whether it is 1784, or some earlier period.

No. 6. On one side a Sun, with thirteen stars around it, and the words "NOVA CONSTELLATIO;" on the other, the letters U.S. surrounded by a vignette, and the words "LIBERTAS ET JUSTITIA 1785."

No. 7. Is the Jersey Half-penny, having on one side a shield, surrounded by the words "E PLURIBUS UNUM;" on the other a Horse's head and a plough, with the words "NOVA CAESAREA, 1785."

No. 8. On one side a head and the word "AUCTORI CONNEC," on the other a female figure very much in the form of a gingerbread child, holding what may be an olive branch in one hand, and a bow and arrow in the other, with the date below it of 1787. This is the old farthing of our boyhood.

No. 9. Has on one side a head, and the words "Georgius III Rex." On the opposite side is a shield cut into quarters, containing respectively the coats of arms of England, Scotland, Ireland and Virginia, surmounted with a crown, and surrounded with "Virginia, 1773." A coin similar to this was a year or two ago dug up in a garden, and with the description given of it, there was published the following history.

The following historical facts are here distinctly referred to. During the usurpation of Cromwell, the colony of Virginia refused to acknowledge his authority, and declared itself independent. Shortly after, finding that Cromwell threatened to send a fleet and army to reduce Virginia to subjection, and fearing the ability of this feeble state to withstand this force, she sent over in a small ship, a messenger to Charles II., then an exile, at Breda, in Flanders. Charles accepted the invitation to come over, and be king of Virginia, and was on the eve of embarking, when he was recalled to the throne of England. As soon as he was restored to the crown of England, in gratitude for the loyalty of Virginia, he caused her coat of arms to be quartered with those of England, Scotland, and Ireland, as an independent member of the Empire. The above coin is clearly confirmatory of these facts. Hence the origin of the phrase "Old Dominion," frequently applied to Virginia.

The coin No. 2, resembles very much, one lately found in Charleston, and of which the following account was published in the Charleston papers:

CURIOUS COIN.—The workmen in preparing the foundation of St. Phillips Church, have found a Coin, the age of which is now 113 years, with the head of George the First. The inscription around which is—Georgius, D. G. Mag. Bri, Fra. Et. Hib. Rex. On the opposite side is a Rose—the inscription, Rosa, Americana, 1722, Utile Dulci. It probably is a coin of one of the Old Thirteen Colonies. Another of these coins was found in April, 1835, in digging a garden in Washington; Pensil, bordering on Brook County, Virginia.—J.M.

were operational data and not for numismatic purposes, but naturally contain much pertinent information for numismatic studies.

Beginnings of American Numismatic Articles

PIERRE EUGENE DU SIMITIERE (1737-84) prepared an inventory of much of his collection of coins, paper money and medals, which was displayed in a museum in Philadelphia in 1782-84. Being an artist, he also had partially completed a numismatic manuscript describing and drawing in superb detail examples of American coins. Unfortunately, his work was never completed or published.

On June 9, 1818, at a New York Historical Society meeting, James Mease, M.D. (1771-1846), a Philadelphia member, gave a detailed description of 17 medals struck to commemorate events in North America up to 1804. It also included the persons and classes of persons to whom War of 1812 medals were awarded. No coins were mentioned. This study was published in The Collections of the New York Historical Society, Vol. III (New York, 1821, pp. 387-404) and contained extensive footnotes describing some of the events giving rise to distribution of the medals.

This imprint appears to be the first truly numismatic article published in America. It was revised and shortened by Mease and republished in Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society (Third Series, Vol. IV, pp. 297-308 [Cambridge, 1834]). In these two versions the word "face" was sometimes selected to designate the obverse, but the available word "obverse" was never used. The words "reverse," "device," "legend" and "exergue" were consistently used with proper technical application.

The use of the word "face" in a description of a coin or medal created confusion before the word "obverse" was fully accepted. "Face" could mean the head side or it could mean either side. In an entry dated September 2, 1787, in the manuscript diary of Reverend William Bentley of Salem, Massachusetts, he undertakes to describe Vermont, New York and Connecticut coppers, as well as counterfeit British halfpence. He first uses the word "face" as referring to each side of the coin. Then, he compares the face on Connecticut coppers to the face of the "Georges" on the counterfeit British coppers, applying the word "reverse" when describing the side with the date. Finally, he states that "the New York & Connecticut coins face opposite ways." We must face up to Bentley's having failed to make an about face in order to save face by using the word "obverse."

A subsequent American numismatic publication was a listing of 38 American medals prepared by Joshua F. Fisher (1808-73), also a Philadelphian, and included in Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society (Third Series, Vol. VI, pp. 286-93 [Boston, 1837])¹. The list was a description of fourteen medals dedicated to George Washington, five medals to Benjamin Franklin, one medal to Thomas Jefferson, one medal to Dr. Benjamin Rush, three medals of the American Revolution and fourteen AMERICA, Etc . . .

MAJOR minors and crowns . . . collector's coins . . . that is what our hobby should be all about . . .

Last year during the 100th ANA Convention in Chicago, I utilized half of my table for the purposes of exhibiting the most complete collection of 8-real cobs by date and assayer, from 1575 to 1773 (Potosi) and over 1,000 "sunface" coins from Argentina (from 1/2 reales to 8 escudos), most of which were part of my die-variety study. The positive feedback I've received from that convention, convinced me to prepare the following offering, which includes some rare and very rare coins. I would dare to say that it could be a very long time before we ever see again an offering like this one containing the quantity of unusual (to say the least), underrated Latin minors. Some of them are the best known specimens. I have been dealing in coins for more than 30 years. Most of my coins come from or go to overseas buyers. This is the first large list of foreign coins I have presented in the U.S.

I am still BUYING better-date world coins. At this time, I am particularly interested in Argentina minors and 8 escudos, such as the 1813 (last auction record 10/91, $7,273) and 1829 (last auction record 10/91, $11,184). This is not a mail bid or an auction; you must be present to buy the coins listed. They will be available for viewing, inspecting, evaluating and purchasing at my table #1529, during the 101st ANA Convention in Orlando, Florida, from August 12-16, 1992. I CANNOT OFFER ANY FURTHER INFORMATION ABOUT THE COINS LISTED. PLEASE COME VIEW THEM IN ORLANDO. I HOPE TO SEE YOU ALL THERE. Remember, if you have any items for sale, please offer them (coins, jewelry, antiques, related books and numismatic items).

Silver Certificates and Silver Dollars

IT SEEMS THAT most people who collect United States coins have little interest in collecting U.S. paper money. Those who favor paper currency usually have come to that field by way of coin collecting, yet they abandon the latter once their interest shifts. This situation appears unnatural to me, as an understanding and appreciation of one area clearly enhances enjoyment of the other.

As a collector of both, I'm at a loss to explain the division between these fields, especially since so many pursue coins and stamps with equal energy. It seems that coins and paper money are more closely allied than coins and stamps, although an interesting collection can comprise all three.

Many persons in the hobby believe that Morgan and Peace dollars have supplanted Lincoln cents and Buffalo nickels as the most popular series. If you are among the legion of silver dollar collectors, you most certainly should own at least a few silver certificates. These notes were issued for some 85 years and were backed dollar for dollar by silver cartwheels.

Until the Treasury halted their distribution in 1964, silver dollars were available for face value by redeeming silver certificates at any Federal Reserve Bank or Treasury facility. In actual practice, any bank could pay out silver dollars in exchange for any U.S. currency, but only silver certificates were specifically redeemable in that metal.

The first such notes were issued in 1878 to coincide with the Bland-Allison Act, which authorized the return of standard silver dollars after a five-year absence. The idea was to circulate paper money in place of the coins, as the latter were not popular outside the Far West. For every silver dollar coined, one dollar in silver certificate currency could be placed in circulation. As the notes wore out, they could be replaced with new issues, as long as the total value of notes in circulation did not exceed the number of coins in the Treasury vaults.

This practice has left collectors two wonderful legacies. Not only are there millions of uncirculated silver dollars in existence today, many dating back more than 100 years, but dozens of silver certificate types also can be found. These comprise some of the most popular and beautiful designs ever to appear on United States currency. The first silver certificate issues of 1878 and 1880 are quite rare today, and their cost is beyond the means of most collectors. Although their designs are interesting, far better things were to come with subsequent issues.

The first commonly collected series is dated 1886. The $1, $2, $5 and $10 notes of this series are affordable for most collectors. The first features a portrait of Martha Washington on its face and very ornate scrollwork on its back. Like other silver certificates, it declares the following: "This certifies that there has been deposited in the Treasury of the United States one silver dollar payable to bearer on demand."

In Very Fine (VF) condition, a common variety of this type is valued at $175, a reasonable figure given the rarity of silver certificates relative to silver dollars (all retail values are taken from the 12th edition of Robert Friedberg's Paper Money of the United States). The $2 silver certificate portrays Civil War General Winfield Scott Hancock. Its back is even more wildly Victorian than that of the $1 note, and a VF specimen lists at $250.

Easily the most tangible link to the Morgan dollar can be found in the $5 silver certificate, Series of 1886. This features the popular "silver dollar back." Although the face of these notes carries a handsome portrait of Ulysses S. Grant, it is the back that lights up the eyes of the silver dollar collector. Here can be found five overlapping Morgan dollars, the center piece turned to reveal the date 1886 on its obverse.

Although not a rare note, demand for this type is unrelenting, and it is valued at $525 in Very Fine condition. If you are determined to acquire one of these, but cannot afford such an expense, a Very Good (VG) specimen lists at only $225. This note could be included as the centerpiece of any display of Morgan dollars, as it really adds some juice to an otherwise repetitive exhibit.

Another popular series of silver certificates is the Educational Series of 1896. Extremely ornate and finely detailed, the $1, $2 and $5 notes of this issue feature allegorical scenes of amazing complexity. They remind me somewhat of tapestries and seem far too beautiful to be mere fiscal paper.

The backs of these notes feature bold portraits of eminent Americans. Depicted on the $1 note are George and Martha Washington. The $2 note, my favorite of the series, portrays inventors Robert Fulton and Samuel Morse. Union Generals Grant and Sheridan complete the series on the $5 silver certificate. The listed values of these notes in VF condition are $200, $450 and $650, respectively. In VG, the figures drop to $85, $175 and $275.

While the Series of 1886 notes complemented silver dollars coined under the Bland-Allison Act of 1878, the Educational Series of 1896 was issued against coins struck under the Sherman Act of 1890. This historical tie-in can greatly enhance a collection of Morgan dollars and add to your understanding of these coins and the economy of the times. Remember, William Jennings Bryan delivered his famous "Cross of Gold" speech during the presidential campaign of 1896. Both the coins and the notes played a role in the fierce debate that ensued over the virtues of free coinage of silver versus the gold standard.

The Educational Series was short-lived, and the Series of 1899 ushered in some of the most popular and durable designs ever to appear on large-size U.S. currency. Notes of these types were printed into the 1920s, although the series date remained unchanged.

The common $1 note features the familiar "black eagle," along with small portraits of Lincoln and Grant. An uncirculated example is valued at as little as $160, while one grading VF is a mere $40. If you want to own only one large-size silver certificate, this is the note for you. The $2 note bears the traditional Gilbert Stuart portrait of Washington, along with two allegorical figures. As with all notes of this series, the back is fairly simple in design when compared to previous issues. Valued at $100 in VF, this note is measurably scarcer than its $1 brother.

The $5 silver certificate is known as the "Indian chief" for its central facing portrait of a Sioux warrior in full headdress. It is easily one of the most popular of all large-size notes and is perennially in demand. Although common, its value of $225 in VF reflects this demand, and an uncirculated example is beyond the budget of most collectors at $1,100. For the purpose of complementing your silver dollar collection, a VF note will do quite nicely.

The $10 silver certificate was not included in this series, but was issued separately with the series dated 1908. While not as attractive or popular as the other silver certificates of this era, the so-called "tombstone" note can still be included in your collection. Its nickname is derived from the central feature of the note's face, a portrait of Thomas A. Hendricks within a tombstone-shaped frame. Listing at $100 in VG and $250 in VF, it is probably undervalued with respect to its more popular contemporaries.

The last issue of large-size silver certificates was dated 1923 and consisted of $1 and $5 notes only. These denominations have fairly simple backs, while their face designs are quite similar to those in use today. The $1 note features the now-familiar portrait of Washington facing right. Aside from its larger size and characteristic blue seal, it could pass for a modern Federal Reserve note. Quite common, these list at only $60 in uncirculated condition, while a VF example is valued at $25.

The $5 bill is the popular "porthole" note, so-called because Lincoln's portrait is found within a heavy, round frame bearing the words UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. Far scarcer than the $1 note, it carries valuations of $300 in VF and $125 in VG.

If the early silver certificates are related to the Bland-Allison Act of 1878 and the later notes associated with the Sherman Act of 1890, then the Series of 1923 notes can be said to represent the Pittman Act of 1918. This legislation caused the destruction and later recoinage of more than 270 million silver dollars. Although the silver certificates dated 1923 were not issued specifically as a result of these actions, they are contemporary with the period of recoinning from 1921 to 1928. An equivalent value in older silver certificates had to be withdrawn from circulation when the silver dollars were destroyed, and it is likely that the need to issue replacement notes beginning in 1921 influenced the decision to redesign the silver certificates in 1923.

The recoinning of silver dollars destroyed between 1918 and 1920 was completed by 1928. About this same time, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was putting the finishing touches on its plan to replace the large-size notes then circulating in the United States with smaller notes of the size used in the Philippines. This plan originally was set to take effect as early as 1913, but the advent of the Federal Reserve System and the First World War caused the program to be shelved for several years.

Since no more silver dollars were coined after 1928, the first small-size silver certificates introduced the following year were intended to merely replace the large notes as the latter were retired. The designs for both face and back were roughly similar to those dated 1923.

The passage of legislation calling for additional silver dollars led to the Series of 1934, which included $1, $5 and $10 silver certificates. These notes, although similar in appearance to previous silver certificates, introduced one very significant difference. While earlier issues promised to pay the bearer "one silver dollar," the notes dated 1934 and later are redeemable for "one dollar in silver."

This subtle change in the wording of the notes' obligation freed the Treasury from maintaining a quantity of silver dollars equal to the dollar value of silver certificates in circulation. In lieu of coin, the notes could now be redeemed with silver of any form, such as ingots or granules, as long as the bearer received a dollar's worth of the metal for each paper dollar tendered.

This action acknowledged that the public did not desire silver dollars, yet it still provided a sound backing for paper currency. By this time, gold coins and gold certificates had been withdrawn from circulation and were, with some exceptions, illegal to own. The stature of silver certificates had risen now that their more prestigious rival was out of the picture. When silver dollar coinage was again terminated in 1935, the Treasury did not have to cease circulating larger amounts of silver certificates, but was free to produce as many as it could back up with silver bullion.

This situation changed very little for nearly 30 years. Subtle revisions were made in the designs, but the issuance of silver certificates continued at a fairly steady level. Without silver dollar coinage, there was little reason for change. The coins ultimately would have an impact, but in a way no one could foresee.

The demand for silver dollars in circulation remained stable, the only real market for them being the western states, such as Nevada, Idaho and Montana. In other parts of the country, the demand for silver dollars rose only in December, when typically they were presented as holiday gifts. Most of these coins were quickly spent by their youthful recipients on candy or toys, after which they were deposited with the day's receipts and returned by banks to the Federal Reserve System.

The number of silver dollars withdrawn from the Treasury's vaults began to rise rapidly after 1958, as post-holiday returns failed to keep up with a growing demand from gambling casinos and other consumers. While the collecting of silver dollars really did not take off until several years later, this market did begin to siphon off some of the supply by the early 1960s.

Each year, the Treasury had to reach deeper into its vaults to meet the demand for additional silver dollars. As coins were retrieved in a "last in, first out" manner, the increasing demand essentially reversed the passage of time. Eventually, this practice led to a bonanza for many when recipients of silver dollars from the Treasury discovered in 1962 that they were being given bags that contained key dates, such as 1898-O and 1903-O. Some even received uncirculated Seated Liberty dollars!

As news of such discoveries spread, lines began forming around the Treasury Building in Washington, D.C. Holders of silver certificates waited for hours to exchange their paper for silver dollars in hopes of striking it rich. While most bags contained only common dates, these could always be redeposited at the bank. The speculator had only his time to lose, yet he stood to gain quite a profit if given one of the "bonus" bags.

The chaos that ensued as mobs surrounded the Treasury Building for hours on end, combined with charges of insider information and favoritism, caused the Treasury to reconsider its policy of providing silver dollars on demand. When previously rare Carson City Mint dollars began turning up in quantity, the supply of coins was cut off. Holders of silver certificates would now have to accept bullion rather than the highly desired cartwheels.

This action came just as Congress was debating the coining of new silver dollars. Such legislation was passed in the summer of 1964, but no one at the Mint was in any hurry to begin production, as the nation was in the grip of a massive coin shortage. To strike silver dollars that would not actually circulate, but rather would go straight into the hands of speculators, seemed the height of folly.

Nevertheless, more than 300,000 silver dollars dated 1964-D were struck the following May. When news of this reached Congress, it quickly backpedaled and denounced the action. President Johnson likewise expressed his anger, although he had signed the bill into law only a few months earlier. The coins were ordered destroyed, but a few are rumored to have survived.

The silver dollar was thus doomed, and the silver certificate would soon follow. None were printed after 1963, Millions of dollars' worth of the notes were redeemed for bullion before the deadline, yet countless notes survive in all conditions. All retain their legal-tender value, and some possess collector value as well.

The Mint and Collectors: Two Centuries of Relationships

THE U.S. MINT is the mother lode for most collectors in the United States. From Philadelphia, affectionately referred to as the "Mother Mint," has come a parade of interesting coins over the years, ranging from great rarities to common issues, and everything in between. Until 1968, proof coins for collectors were produced there. Since then, San Francisco has been the source of these.

The other mints—New Orleans, Louisiana (operated 1838-1909); Charlotte, North Carolina (1838-61); Dahlonega, Georgia (1838-61); Carson City, Nevada (1870-93); Denver, Colorado (1906 to date); and West Point, New York (1984 to date; officially called a mint since 1988)—have each produced their share of collectable pieces.

Today, the U.S. Mint, as the overall department is referred to, has as its best single customer the collecting fraternity. Each year, collectors, investors, and others interested in collecting or saving pieces spend hundreds of millions of dollars on products ranging from proof sets and commemoratives to gold and silver bullion "eagle" coins. In the process, tens of millions of dollars of profit are returned to the Treasury.

Indeed, the U.S. Mint is one of the very few large departments of the United States government—for all I know, perhaps the only one—that year after year returns a handsome profit to taxpayers. As such, perhaps its director should be put up on a pedestal and honored, especially in the current era of fantastic budget deficits. As it is, the U.S. Mint is strictly second fiddle to Congress and, for that matter, to the President. As this article is being written in June 1992, the Senate has not yet acted to confirm incoming Mint Director David Ryder, and in Philadelphia at the Engraving Department there is no chief engraver—President Bush hasn't gotten around to appointing one.

In recent years, the numismatic community has spent untold amounts of time, effort and interest to encourage the U.S. Mint to promote numismatics. Much of this has fallen on deaf, or at least unresponsive, ears—not necessarily at the Mint itself, but in Congress, which must approve new coinage proposals.

Examples of this indifference are legion. Perhaps the most ironic is that in 1991 when the American Numismatic Association celebrated its centennial, a stamp was produced by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but, despite entreaties by the ANA, no commemorative coin was made. And yet, an 1891-1991 ANA commemorative coin would have been a sure thing. Producing the die would have cost just a few thousand dollars. If the Mint could not have afforded that, certainly the ANA might have paid for it. A couple million coins or more would have been sold, and the result would have been that the taxpayers of the United States would have made millions of dollars of profit once again. However, logic often finishes last when it comes to Congress.

Then, too, there is the idea of new regular coinage designs as proposed by various hobby leaders and periodicals. Recently, Congress rejected the idea. When one thinks of relationships between collectors and the U.S. Mint, Congress must be considered. Beyond that, collectors have had their own relationship directly with the government minting authority.

In charge of the U.S. Mint and its various branches is the director. The office of the director has been in Washington, D.C., since the early 1870s, but before that it was located in Philadelphia. Currently the office, unoccupied, presides over eight branches. Eugene Essner is acting director until a full director is appointed. Essner is a career employee with the Mint and is familiar with commemorative programs, the collecting fraternity and like considerations.

However, the political situation being what it is, career Mint employees traditionally have not been appointed to the directorship. Rather, the office has gone to someone who has a record of political accomplishments. Of course, this does little to promote close relationships between the director and Mint employees, and the knowledge of coining and numismatics possessed by the director often is nil. Sometimes collectors are lucky when an enlightened person fills the director's shoes, sometimes they aren't.

The record shows that early directors of the Mint, beginning with David Rittenhouse (April 1792 through June 1795), paid relatively little attention to collectors. Beginning in the 1830s, when the Mint Cabinet was established by Adam Eckfeldt and William E. DuBois, a camaraderie developed with the collecting fraternity. Earlier, numismatists desiring specimens apparently were greeted warmly and allowed to acquire whatever they wanted for face value, including proof coins.

An often-told story relates that young J.J. Mickley in 1827 went to the Philadelphia Mint and secured four quarter dollars of that date in proof finish, paying 25 cents each for them. The Mint kept on hand a supply of current coins dating back a decade or so and was happy to part with them to the occasional collector who came by to visit.

With the inception of the Mint Cabinet in 1838, the Mint aggressively sought to augment its holdings by purchasing and trading with collectors. In a well-known transaction in 1843, pioneer numismatist Matthew A. Stickney acquired an 1804 silver dollar by giving the Mint an Immune Columbia cent struck in gold.

I am not aware that any of the early directors from Rittenhouse through his successors—Henry William deSaussure, Elias Boudinot, Robert Patterson, Samuel Moore, Robert Maskell Patterson, George N. Eckert and Thomas M. Pettit (who served for only about a month in 1853, for he was not confirmed by Congress)—were dedicated numismatists. However, it is likely that they set aside a few coins as souvenirs.

This changed after June 1853, when James Ross Snowden was named to the position. Snowden was deeply interested in numismatics, was an avid collector, and eventually produced two books, one on the contents of the Mint Cabinet and the other being the first serious study of coins, tokens and medals pertaining to George Washington. On May 21, 1859, Snowden issued a circular that reflected his numismatic instincts:

I desire to obtain for the Cabinet of the Mint, as practicable, one or more copies of every medal, medallet, coin or token, in which the head or name of Washington appears.

The possessor of any such memorial of Washington will confer an obligation by sending me a description of it, and state whether he is willing to present it to the Mint, or dispose of it, either for cash (and if so, what price), or exchange it for other coins or medals. In the course of a recent investigation I ascertained the existence of sixty different memorials of the above character, and there are, doubtless, others which have escaped my notice.

A few of these medals, etc., are now in the Mint; my desire, if possible, [is] to supply the Cabinet with a full set of these interesting memorials of "the Father of His Country." To accomplish which object, I invite the cooperation of my fellow-citizens.

It would be interesting to learn exactly what coins could have been obtained in trade by someone having a Washington piece desired by Snowden. Undoubtedly, the list would have included restrikes of certain earlier issues, such as the popular 1856 Flying Eagle cent, which seems to have been reissued with official sanction during the years 1858-60.

Throughout Snowden's administration, which lasted until April 1861, there was a close connection with the numismatic community. Relationships were cordial. At the time, he was a member ex officio of the Philadelphia Numismatic and Antiquarian Society. After Snowden left office, he petitioned the Society to continue him on its membership rolls—ample indication of his numismatic interest. Years later his son, A. Loudon Snowden, would serve as superintendent of the Philadelphia Mint (1879-85) and would be heavily involved in restriking, the production of limited-issue patterns, and the like.

As years went on, the Mint continued to maintain a fine relationship with the collecting community, until the 1870s, when Mint practices began to be criticized frequently. The brief term of William Millward (October 1866 through April 1867) was not particularly memorable, but that of Henry Richard Linderman (April 1867 through April 1869, and again from April 1873 through December 1878) was, as was that of James Pollock (May 1869 through March 1873).

Under the Linderman and Pollock administrations, many special pieces were produced privately for sale to collectors. Restrikes were made with careless abandon, and many illogical die combinations resulted. One has but to look at J. Hewitt Judd's United States Patterns, Experimental and Trial Pieces to learn of such things as vast quantities of unnecessary standard silver patterns of 1869-71, pattern Trade dollars and silver dollars of the 1870s using the obsolete silver dollar reverse without IN GOD WE TRUST retired in 1866, and the famous 1868 large cent (produced in an era in which the Mint had no intention of bringing the large cent back into circulation). The diversity and quantity of such pieces boggles the mind.

It is not clear who restruck the pieces or when. Often, the coins themselves are the only evidence. However, we do know that at one point in time Theodore and/or George Eckfeldt, of the chief coiner's family, made the rounds of coin dealers, traveling as far north as Boston to see W. Elliot Woodward, bearing quantities of restruck 1862 GOD OUR TRUST pattern

From time to time, when popular pieces such as the 1879 $4 gold Stella were produced, dealers and collectors petitioned the Mint for the opportunity to buy them, and were met with varying attitudes, ranging from enthusiasm to rejection. Many were the complaints aired in contemporary catalogs concerning the unfair practices of the Mint in the sale and distribution of patterns. (Anyone seeking more information should consult Walter Breen's Complete Encyclopedia of United States and Colonial Coins, Don Taxay's U.S. Mint and Coinage and The Fantastic 1804 Dollar by Eric P. Newman and Kenneth E. Bressett for starters.)

The prize product of the Mint in the period from about 1835 to 1870 was the 1804 silver dollar. Director Henry Richard Linderman possessed a specimen which, undoubtedly, he obtained directly from the source—the Mint he was supervising. However, in later years his wife attempted to launder the situation by telling the incredible story that the coin was so expensive Linderman had to buy it on time payments. Following Linderman's death, his coins were sold at auction, but the government stepped in to seize dies and certain other things that should not have been in his possession.

The administration of Horatio C. Burchard (February 1879 through June 1885) saw the production of a number of rarities, including such delicacies as an 1884 proof set in copper and an 1885 proof set in aluminum, to mention just two special sets, plus the famous and very rare 1884 (ten said to have been struck) and 1885 (five struck) Trade dollars.

After Burchard, irregularities at the Mint seemed to have ceased, at least for a while. Succeeding directorships are not particularly numismatically memorable. By this time, the office had been transferred to Washington, and most contact with collectors was through the superintendent of the Philadelphia Mint. Each year the Pennsylvania facility made and sold proof sets to collectors. In general, numismatists were treated kindly.

After the publication of Augustus G. Heaton's Treatise on the Coinage of the U.S. Branch Mints in 1893, the collecting of branch mint coins became popular. A number of instances have been recorded in which collectors sent money to the various mints and received for face value such things as 1893-S dollars and 1894-O $10 pieces. This helpful attitude toward collectors would prevail at the mints for many years thereafter. (As I related in The American Numismatic Association Centennial History, in the 1930s the Treasury Department issued lists of silver dollars, double eagles and other coins dating back many years that were available for face value plus a slight handling charge. The government was always willing to accommodate the needs of numismatists.)

There were some cracks in the façade, however, but these were caused mainly by individuals at the Mint, rather than by general policy. A dramatic instance of poor attitude is related in an 1886-dated document located by R.W. Julian. Its contents are self-explanatory:

Harlan P. Smith, being duly sworn, says that he resides in the City of New York and that he called on the U.S.

Mint in Philadelphia in June 1886 and went to the Coin and Medal Clerk and requested to be furnished with a Proof gold dollar of the current year. The clerk opened a small writing desk and took out a round paper box which contained numerous gold Proofs. He scraped them over with his fingers and rubbed them together, upon which proceeding deponent looked with utter astonishment as [the clerk] defaced the coins with pin marks and scratches.

Deponent had always believed and still believes that Proof coins are struck by the government for the benefit of coin collectors who are required to pay a premium for such perfect coins, and that from the improper manner in which they were handled by this clerk they were blemished and therefore collectors ought not to be compelled to pay a premium for such ignorance and incompetence displayed by the clerk in charge of that department.

Deponent further states that the clerk informed him that there were no Proof gold dollars to be had, and that he [deponent] then requested to be furnished with two silver Proof sets and twenty minor Proof sets, and when said request was made the clerk made some remark which left the impression in deponent's mind that the clerk was conferring a great favor upon him and acted as though he owned the entire Mint and the contents thereof. Deponent therefore claims that the government should not employ clerks unless they are fully competent for such position and said clerk, having been shown to be clearly incompetent, should be removed.

After the mid 1930s, collectors seemed to have become a nuisance at the Mint. The years 1935-36 saw many abuses with commemoratives, problems caused not by the Mint, but by Congress, which approved willy-nilly all sorts of bizarre proposals for coinage (as may indeed be the case in 1992). Rampant speculation resulted whenever short production runs occurred.

By Autumn 1936 the boom had subsided, and Congress had developed an adversarial relationship with the collecting community. Still, this did not necessarily affect those in charge at the Philadelphia Mint, and from 1936 through 1942, proof sets were issued each year. World War II forced suspension of proof coinage, which did not resume until 1950, when the Mint realized once again what a gold mine it had with the collecting fraternity. The yearly issuance of proof sets plus uncirculated mint sets brought in large sums to Treasury coffers. However, requests by the collecting community to participate in such things as coinage designs, commemoratives and special issues were largely ignored.

Ever since the 1950s, I have had regular contact with the Mint, and I can give some firsthand observations concerning the administrators—admittedly a sensitive subject, as I still call upon them for research assistance. Nellie Tayloe Ross (May 1933 through April 1953) seems to have been neutral on the subject of coin collecting—neither for it nor against it. Then came William H. Brett (July 1954 through January 1961), whose tenure left little in the way of a numismatic imprint.

Enter Eva Adams, appointed by John F. Kennedy, who served from October 1961 through August 1969. In 1965, when a great nationwide coin shortage developed, Miss Adams led a personal war against numismatists and went so far as to remove mintmarks from coinage and to denounce the collecting fraternity. Coin collectors fought back, and eventually peace was achieved. For a time, however, she was "Numismatic Public Enemy #1."

Later, she became a friend of collectors and was a frequent attendee at ANA conventions. Indeed, she once sought the presidency of the ANA. Amazingly, she was given the Farran Zerbe Memorial Award, the highest ANA honor, but when a well-known researcher familiar with Miss Adams' earlier antagonism toward coin collectors attempted to find out who proposed the honor, it was learned that the ANA had no records remaining on the subject. Equally mysterious, the Numismatic Literary Guild gave Miss Adams its coveted Clemy Award, although I am not aware that Miss Adams personally wrote anything at all of lasting importance—perhaps I overlooked something? To Miss Adams goes the prize for having the most bitter, adversarial relationship with numismatists of any Mint director in history, although things were smoothed over later.

Mary Brooks, superintendent from September 1969 through February 1977, had a fine relationship with the collecting community, was frequently seen at ANA conventions, and encouraged the hobby. After her retirement, she was hired by Paramount International Coin Corporation as a consultant, a post she held until recently.

Stella Hackel Sims, an attorney from Vermont, was in the post from November 1977 through April 1981. Ms. Hackel was kind to me and granted me permission on several occasions to visit various mints for research and study, as did Mary Brooks before her. Numismatically, Mrs. Sims is not particularly well remembered, because of her short tenure. However, she did destroy vast quantities of irreplaceable 19th- and early 20th-century Mint archival material, a loss that will forever have implications on the hobby.

Donna Pope, who served two five-year terms beginning in July 1981, was the most visible of all Mint directors in the history of the office and the one most closely related to the hobby. A student of human nature and a good businesswoman, Mrs. Pope recognized that collectors are essential to the success of Mint programs, and she did not hesitate to call upon members of the numismatic fraternity for consultation. She was a frequent figure at collectors' gatherings, and worked to develop many new programs (including the most successful commemorative programs the Mint ever staged), which contributed to record profits for the Treasury.

I have always regretted that she and Chief Engraver Elizabeth Jones had a falling out, but that is another subject. History will remember that Mrs. Pope's administration coincided with Ms. Jones' chief engravship—the most accomplished Mint director working with certainly one of the finest artists and sculptors ever to serve as chief engraver.

Now, in 1992, the United States Mint is well-organized with regard to its relationship to the collecting community. Mint officials often are seen at conventions, and the Treasury Department has set up booths and educational displays at numerous such events. However, the Mint is beholden to Congress, and at the present, Congress is the problem.

I have never met Mr. Ryder, the gentleman scheduled to be the new director. I believe we should all welcome him with enthusiasm. How he will fare in the annals of history is up to him, but certainly he has the opportunity to work with millions of enthusiastic numismatists across the country. •

The year was 1905 and President Theodore Roosevelt asked the noted sculptor and his personal friend, Augustus Saint-Gaudens, to redesign our nation's coinage based on the model of the sculptured high relief designs of the ancient Greeks. Inspired by the ancient muses, Saint-Gaudens created what many consider the most beautiful and artistic coin in the history of U.S. coinage -- the 1907, Roman Numerals, high relief $20.00 gold coin. The coinage of the ancient Greeks, that inspired Saint-Gaudens, as well as the subsequent coinage of the Roman and Byzantine empires comprise one of the most popular collecting pastimes known throughout the world.

Both affordable and educational, collecting classical coinage is an easy avocation to pursue and Classical Numismatic Group is in its 16th year of serving the collector in this fascinating field. If you, like Roosevelt and Saint-Gaudens, are inspired by ancient coinage, then let us introduce you to its pleasures with our fully illustrated and detailed catalogues.

The United States' First Dollar Note

EXCLUDING CONTINENTAL Currency, the first United States federal $1 note was dated and issued in 1862, the same year the First Division of the National Currency Bureau was established. Secretary of the Treasury Salmon P. Chase had entrusted S.M. Clark to be the Bureau's chief of operations. At the U.S. Treasury Department, Clark had served as the Chief Clerk of the Bureau of Construction. Two years later, Secretary Chase renamed this Bureau "The Engraving and Printing Bureau of the Treasury Department." The first reference to the title used for the Bureau today, the "Bureau of Engraving and Printing," can be traced to July 31, 1868. Thus, 1992 is both the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Mint and the 130th anniversary of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Abraham Lincoln had stated publicly that, if elected President, one of his first acts would be to appoint Salmon P. Chase and William H. Seward to his cabinet, a conciliatory gesture to opposite wings of the Republican Party. Both Chase and Seward were politically ambitious, but lacked backgrounds that qualified them for their cabinet appointments. Looking back, however, we can say that as Secretary of State, Seward did at least one thing right—in 1867 he insisted that the United States purchase Alaska. We also can say that Chase surprised everyone by performing well as Secretary of the Treasury.

The Treasury Department had issued Treasury notes as early as 1812, however, no federal $1 notes of any type were issued until 1862. The first $1 and $2 United States "legal-tender" notes were authorized by the Act of July 1, 1862; larger denominations had been issued a few months earlier. (The $500 interest-bearing Treasury note authorized by the Act of December 23, 1857, was the first note to have a green back. Although not intended as general currency, these notes did at times pass from hand to hand. Nevertheless, it was the short-lived Demand notes, issued in 1861, that prompted the use of the colloquial term "greenback" for all U.S. paper money, then and now.)

A number of men in government, Lincoln and Chase among them, agreed to have their portraits on paper money and bonds while they were in office (until a law was passed in 1866 that forbade placing the image of a living person on paper money). As Secretary of the Treasury, Salmon P. Chase had something to say about whose portraits would be placed on new paper money issues. He made certain that President Lincoln's portrait appeared on the $10 Demand note.

Chase had ambitions to succeed Lincoln in the White House. What could be better for an unannounced Presidential candidate than to have his portrait put before the general public every day? Chase accomplished this by having his own portrait, engraved by Joseph P. Ourdan, on one of the new United States "legal-tender" notes.

This bit of chicanery was intended to achieve what thousands of these same notes could not buy—recognition.

It seems that the Secretary's portrait was to be placed on the $2 note. However, an excerpt from a letter dated July 25, 1862, from F. Shepard, president of the National Bank Note Company, to George Harrington, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, makes reference to a change:

We have taken the liberty to remove the portrait of the Secretary from the twos to the ones, as the greater number of that denomination will introduce him more generally to the people, many of whom we find are desirous to know the looks of the man to whom the country is so largely indebted for furnishing the sinews of war.

Slight changes have been made to conform as nearly as practicable to suggestions made by Miss Chase . . .

(The last comment refers to Kate Chase, socialite and influential daughter of Salmon P. Chase.)

When the serial numbers of these notes reached 1,000,000, numbering began again with "1," with the addition of "Series 2," "Series 3," etc. Since 28,351,438 notes were issued, Series 29 would be the last series to bear serial number "1." Consequently, many number "1" notes were issued, however, only one note can be identified as the first $1 note. That number "1" note identified as Series 1 was presented to Secretary Salmon P. Chase.

This legendary note was once in my custody as curator of The Chase Manhattan Bank Money Museum. As the letter illustrated here confirms, it had previously belonged to George Blake, a pioneer among paper money collectors. Sometime after 1914, this note the notes he had fathered several years earlier. In a 5-to-4 decision, Salmon P. Chase was among the dissenters who voted against the legality of United States "legal-tender" notes, which included the $1 note displaying his portrait. • was purchased by the legendary Colonel E.H.R. Green, a collector who at one time held many numismatic rarities. The note probably was purchased by The Chase Manhattan Bank in the 1950s.

Chase never achieved his ambition of becoming President. In an oblique move in 1864, President Lincoln considered Chase for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Lincoln had come to know Chase well. Although he knew Chase was qualified for the job, he had some reservations. To New York Congressman Augustus Frank, Lincoln said, "[Chase] is a man of unbounded ambition, and has been working all his life to become President. If I were sure that he would go on the bench and give up his aspirations and do nothing but make himself a great judge, I would not hesitate a moment." Lincoln was assured that Chase would devote himself to the position. On December 6, 1864, Lincoln submitted Chase's name for consideration.

While he was Secretary of the Treasury, Chase hoped the United States "legal-tender" notes would be withdrawn after the war and specie would be returned to circulation. Chase claimed that he "never lost sight to the necessity of resumption."

Now, as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, he was in the position of voting on the constitutionality of

THE UNITED STATES.

This note bears the portrait of the late Hon. Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury, and formerly Governor of Ohio, and was issued to him in August or September 1862.

Some time later Mr. Chase presented it to Horatio Beall, who came also, I believe, from Ohio.

From Mr. Beall it passed to his daughter Alice, afterwards Mrs. Will, who is now a widow living in Chevy Chase, Maryland.

Mrs. Will retained the note until it was purchased by me in the year 1914.

Collectors and Dealers Can Now Get Every U.S. Coin They Submit Graded and Slabbed...even if the coin has a problem!

... It means freedom of choice and freedom from all the other grading services who refuse to grade and encapsulate problem coins that are genuine.

"Introducing The New Improved PCI Certified Coin Capsules®"

GREEN LABEL FOR "NO PROBLEM" COINS

OUR STANDARD CERTIFIED CAPSULE
(actual size)

Destined to make every coin you own
(even the problem ones)
More Valuable Than Ever Before!

Today, it only costs

$750

To get every coin you own in one of these clear, attractive, museum-quality encasements (slab) that is ultrasonically sealed.

(actual size)

JULY 1992

Beginning Today: When you submit coins... every one of them will be graded and encapsulated. Never before has any grading service offered such extensive attention to your coins. Coins without any problems will continue to be graded and holdered with the premium "old-familiar" GREEN INSERT LABEL. Coins with problems will now be graded and holdered with the new certified RED INSERT LABEL. These will be graded with the problem described and printed below the grade. Collectors and dealers can now get their coins graded, certified and slabbed even if the coin has a problem.

You make the choice between other grading services and PCI. And when you do please consider the following reasons that make the difference:

(1). PCI only charges $7.50 per coin (plus postage, etc.) to grade, authenticate, encapsulate and to process your order regardless of its value. Compare this to $26 or $22 or even $12!

- (2). More collectors, dealers, individuals and banks (over 4100 total) have submitted coins to PCI than any other grading service. We challenge any grading service to match our record beginning the day we opened on June 1, 1989 until now!
- (3). Our standard express "turn-around" time from the day we receive your coins to the day we ship them out is 6 working days. At all of the other services this will cost you a minimum of $26! Our price is $7.50.
- (4). Anyone may submit coins to PCI at the same low rates. The 3 other major grading services have formed exclusive dealer networks... thereby restricting who may get coins graded. Why do you think they charge so much? It's obviously money in the dealers pocket not yours! No longer do you have to go through an "in-crowd" to get consistently graded coins. It's your private business!

- (5). Every genuine dated coin you now submit (except plugged, holed, altered or undistinguishable) will be encapsulated in either the GREEN LABEL or RED LABEL slab. Collectors know that coins in slabs are generally worth more and now you can get in on the profits. PCI does reserve the right to refuse to encapsulate any coin for any reason it feels would be detrimental to the numismatic industry.
- (6). Any purchaser or submitter of a PCI coin who believes their coin(s) is misgraded, improperly attributed, or has questionable authenticity may resubmit the slab for a re-evaluation and/or reslabbing. The resubmitted process of evaluation and/or reselling will be paid for by PCI (excluding return postage and insurance which you pay).

6 DAY EXPRESS SERVICE SLAB SUBMITTAL FORM

Coin(s) will be shipped on or before the 6th working day after we receive them and will be sent U.S. Registered Mail.

A Medal Most Suitable

AS INVITATIONS TO baby showers go, it was most unusual. For the norm, I consider showers to be festive occasions devoid of male participation, but not only was I invited, I also was told that the usual array of anticipated gifts—bottle warmers, crib blankets, bootie sets, diaper services and the like—were not options. That which was acceptable was limited to cash, check or credit card to cover the $20 price of admission. There would be no petits fours, tea cookies or lemonade. Instead, guests were invited to feast on spicy barbecue ribs, grilled chicken and “all the fix-ins.” A cash bar would complement the cuisine.

Not only was this to be an event of a different sort, the names of the expectant parents were equally unfamiliar—JuJu and Barney Gorilla! A quick check of our ANA membership roster failed to reveal any such surnamed individuals. Nagging suspicion was soon confirmed. I made the honored list of invitees by virtue of the ANA election of a year ago—the office of the presidency commands strange expectations.

Prospective parents should never invite coin collectors to a shower without anticipating the receipt of gifts numismatically related—a birth-year set mounted in lucite, a proof set of appropriate date, or a Silver-Towne ingot with respective design. Mine was to be a medal of French Mint manufacture.

The French Mint—La Monnaie de Paris—is the foremost producer of art medals for all occasions. The Mint is, so to speak, the “Hallmark” of the numismatic trade. From its stock of existing dies, some of which date back to the 16th century, collectors can order medals suitable for presentation at weddings and all the occasions that follow.

A most fitting medal was found. The obverse of the 72mm bronze piece displays a striking resemblance to the father, while the reverse pictures the family-to-be—mother, father and youngster—in a wooded setting.

This was no ordinary gift, but then, neither is the blessed event to come. Candidly speaking, JuJu and Barney are a couple of gorillas—lowland gorillas—and, as births in captivity go, the event is most unusual. Gorilla births among confined primates are events of note, although they have become less rare since the first was recorded in 1956 at the zoo in Columbus, Ohio. Gorillas are less temperamentally suited to captivity than other primates.

This will be the premier event for America's only mountain zoo, the Cheyenne Mountain Zoo here in Colorado Springs. Set high above the Broadmoor Hotel, the zoo is centered amid 70 acres of scrub oak, spruce, aspen and ponderosa pine. More than 500 wild animals make their home on these high slopes, but it is the zoo's “Primate World” that is being featured at the moment. It is the reason behind the unusual baby shower.

Primate World is a totally new indoor/outdoor exhibit featuring natural settings for great apes and monkeys. Glass enclosures allow visitors to fantasize that they are in the jungle, face-to-face with the animals. Primate World is billed as “a most exciting and realistic environment for primates.” It is not an understatement.

Although the area outside the primate building is restricted, animals can run, roam, swing and bask in jungle-like settings. Most primates at the zoo were born in captivity and had never been out of their prison-like cages before the opening of the new facility. When the animals were transferred to their new home, some at first even hesitated to venture out of doors. The new world was too strange for them. Baby shower guests were told that when the last of the great apes discovered its new-found freedom, albeit limited, there was not a dry eye among the staff.

The baby shower was staged as a fund-raiser for the zoo. No one minded paying “admission.” It was for a most worthwhile cause. In this day of federal cutbacks and tight budgets, zoos, like other nonprofit entities, must turn to innovative approaches to fund their endeavors. Numismatics can provide a partial answer.

In the case of the Cheyenne Mountain Zoo, the medal will be auctioned off. It should bring far more than its nominal cost (approximately $30 when ordered direct from the Administration de Monnaies et Medailles, 11 Quai de Conti, Paris VI, France, or $50 when purchased from The Nature Company, a chain of stores throughout the United States) for the zoo's "Adopt-An-Animal Fund."

In addition to medals, there are many world commemorative coins depicting wild and endangered species. Such pieces also can be used for fund-raising purposes. The baby lowland gorilla, due in September, will be about six months old when the American Numismatic Association holds its next early spring convention at Colorado Springs' Broadmoor Hotel, March 11-13, 1993. Perhaps we can ask the zoo to auction its medal during the convention to prove that roles played by numismatists need not be limited. •

Dollars a Continuing Problem for Mint

IN A DEPARTURE from my usual column, I'd like to take a look at the U.S. Mint's production of dollar coinage, a tradition that began 200 years ago.

The United States dollar was established as our national monetary unit in 1792. It would have been nice if we could have minted a few dollar coins that year, but the equipment was not ready. In fact, things were so disorganized that none were struck until two years later. There was no silver for them, the Mint was not set up for production, and the existing equipment could not strike large-size coins. The public had to wait for their dollar coins until a larger screw press was built. They were disappointed in the delay and the lack of economy in Mint operations.

These were not the only reasons it took so long to begin coinage of our national monetary unit. There was a bit of bickering going on between the government and those in the private sector who wanted the coinage contract. The generally prevailing opinion was that the establishment was unnecessarily expensive and "less productive than was rationally expected." Firms in England wanted the business. Many people suggested that the design include a portrait of President George Washington.

Fortunately, our first President held out for a national mint and only a representation of Liberty. That victory seems to be one of the most sensible the Mint can claim in the past 200 years.

The first dollar coins of 1794 were not at all well struck. They were made before the heavy-duty equipment was installed, and the dies were not properly aligned. Just about all of them show a characteristic weakness on the left portion of the design on both sides of the coin. The earliest newspaper account of the dollar pieces said that they were too delicate and lacked the boldness necessary for good coinage. Apparently the Mint took note, for when coinage resumed the next year, the dollars were made with better dies and equipment.

The 1795 dollars were so much better that the Mint attempted to re-coin some of the 1794 pieces to make them look nicer. (This seems to have been the only time in the history of the Mint that such a thing was done.) In 1795 some of the 1794 dollars were put back into the press and stamped with the new design. Only one surviving piece is known; it now resides in a private collection. How many pieces originally were re-coined in this manner remains a mystery.

One of the provisions of the act establishing the Mint was that coinage, including refining, was to be executed at the public's expense. The person who brought bullion to the Mint received as much in new coins as he had turned in for coinage. The new dollar was intended pass on a par with the Spanish-American "piece of eight" that was estimated to weigh 416 grains and was to contain the ungainly ratio of 179 parts copper to 1,485 parts silver.

Albion Cox, assayer of the Mint, and David Rittenhouse, Mint director, both complained that this fineness ratio was impossible to work with. They recommended a reduction of the copper to 10 percent and a revised weight standard of 412.5 grains. Congress, however, opposed this suggestion. Director Rittenhouse proposed as a compromise that the silver content be increased from 371.25 to 374.75 grains, creating a coin of .900 fineness. Both Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton thought this a practical solution.

Rittenhouse had good reason to believe that Congress would approve his plan and began coining the 1794 dollars using his non-standard alloy. He continued using this unauthorized standard for all dollar coins of the first year, and well into 1795 for that year's Flowing Hair dollars. The thought was great, but Congress never did change the alloy requirements at that time, and all of the coins made to this standard were technically illegal!

For depositors of bullion, this meant that about 3.5 grains of extra silver had to be put into each dollar they received for their metal. That represented a net loss of about 1 percent from what they would have received if their dollars had been struck at legal fineness. The biggest such depositor, John Vaughan, computed his total loss at $2,260 and demanded reimbursement from Congress. His claim was approved in February 1800, and he was paid for the shortage. The incredible coinage fineness of .89243+ (or $1485/1664$) was adhered to; it finally was changed by Congress to the recommended .900 in 1837.

Could anything more have gone wrong with our first dollar coinage?

Yes. For some reason, a number of the 1795 Flowing Hair dollars were altered by the Mint in a most curious way. (We still do not quite know what happened.) The unusual feature of these coins is a large silver plug in the center, on some of the coins known as Bolender-9. About a dozen or so have been reported, and it is likely that more exist.

There is no question about the plug having been inserted at the Mint. The coins are well made, and the strike is over the plug. The planchets were drilled at the center and a silver plug inserted. The planchet then was struck between normal dies. The only readily detectable abnormality on these coins is a telltale circle at the center of both sides of the coins measuring about 10mm in diameter. Making coins in this fashion was not easy or inexpensive. So why was it done?

The Mint had experimented with a similar coinage in 1792 when a silver plug was inserted in a copper coin to bring its value up to face. But why add a silver plug to a silver coin? The answer might have something to do with an attempt to alter the silver content because of Rittenhouse's embarrassment over making coins to an illegal standard. Or it might have been an experiment to reclaim lightweight planchets by adding more silver. Here again is a numismatic mystery that may never be solved.

Not quite so baffling is the old story about George Washington throwing a silver dollar across the Potomac, an incident that probably never happened. If it did, the coin most likely was a Spanish dollar and not one from the new Mint. When Lord Coleridge raised the topic of this remarkable feat, William Evarts, Secretary of State under President Rutherford B. Hayes, responded that "a dollar went much further in those days."

There was never much demand for silver dollars while they were being made in the early years of this country. A dollar was roughly equal to a day's wages for most workers. It was more money than most people needed for daily transactions. Consequently, coinage of silver dollars was halted in 1804. During that year, 19,570 pieces were struck, but all were from dies dated 1802 or 1803. Unfortunately for later Mint personnel, that fact was not recorded. By 1835, when a few specimen dollars were needed for presentation sets, the Mint went looking for examples dated 1804.

Not knowing that none were made with that date, new dies were created, and a few special 1804 pieces were made around 1835 or 1836. Whether or not these should be considered illegitimate has been hotly debated for the past 100 years. Many Mint officials have proclaimed them to be genuine and original. Collectors have paid enormous sums for them. But still they remain a questionable part of our national coinage.

We next hear about silver dollars when Mint Director R.M. Patterson ordered Engraver Christian Gobrecht to prepare a set of dies using as the design a seated figure of Liberty. The idea was neither new nor novel. His inspiration came from the seated figure of Britannia used on English coins since 1672. That figure was said to be a representation of the king's mistress and came originally from a Roman coin depicting the submissive Britannia as a Roman colony. Artist Gobrecht did an outstanding job of translating the design into something worthwhile, but before the coins could be put into full production, the Mint arbitrarily altered the design to something so unappealing that the public hated it for the next 50 years.

That, however, was only part of what went wrong with the famous Gobrecht dollar coinage. On the original design, the engraver's name was displayed prominently on the obverse. He deserved the honor. But the Mint responded to some minor complaints and forced him to remove his name. In 1836 dollars were made for circulation, but they were all struck as proofs! In addition, no collar dies were ready, so the coins were made with a plain edge.

Later, in 1837, when more coins were needed, the Mint decided to use the old 1836 dies, but to align them medal style (head to head) to distinguish them from the earlier issue. By 1839, when a few more of these beautiful dollars were needed, new dies were made, and a collar for the reeded edge was finished. Only 300 were made, again all in proof. When those were gone and collectors began asking for specimens, the Mint greedily struck different combinations of dies and dates to satisfy the demand.

By the time the new Seated coinage began in earnest in 1840, there really was no need for the coins. They were worth more than a dollar in silver value and actually were sold by the Mint at $1.08 each. Most eventually went into melting pots. Still the Mint persisted, and by 1873, when the price of silver was much lower, it decided to make even more unwanted dollars for use in the overseas trade. Extra silver was added, and the coins were called Trade dollars.

Unfortunately, Trade dollars were not wanted either. They were valued at less than a dollar in this country, and many unsuspecting people accepted them at a loss. The whole plan was a failure, and the coins eventually were demonetized. As the only United States coins so dishonored, these should be unique, but the story does not stop there. In the Coinage Act of 1965, someone forgot about the Trade dollars and made all old U.S. coins legal tender, thus reinstating them.

About the only Trade dollars that were truly wanted were the proof pieces made for collectors. That venture was so profitable that the Mint continued making proofs long after dollar coinage was suspended in 1878. It even made some dollars dated 1884 and 1885, though no one can even guess when those were made. What we do know is that, like the 1804 dollars, these have a less-than-legitimate origin.

Morgan dollars have a similar turbulent history. They were made, and melted, primarily for political reasons and to satisfy the mining industry. Under the Pittman Act of 1918, more than 270 million dollars were melted, only to be replaced with nearly 100 million new pieces in 1921. Later that year, a new Peace design was started without congressional sanction because the Pittman Act referred only to bullion and not the actual design. That gave the go-ahead for the Peace design that had been languishing since the end of World War I, with support only from the ANA. In this rare piece of good luck for numismatists, we almost got the new coins that year. They were not made until December and not released until early in 1922.

The silver dollar story could end here, but it doesn't. The Mint is still making silver dollars, but now they weigh a full ounce and are sold to the public at $5 to $6 each. You remember what happened with the Eisenhower "silver" dollars, and I don't have to remind anyone of the fiasco of the Susan B. Anthony dollars. Millions of them are still in storage and may eventually be destroyed—only to be superseded by some new, experimental dollar coin intended to replace the paper now in circulation. Will it work? Your guess is as good as mine. Perhaps this time they will do it right. •

There Is Much Left to Do!

WE HAVE NOW completed the first year of our second hundred. Progress, I am finding, moves far too slowly. I have only begun my agenda, and yet I am beginning to see the end of my tenure. Ahead remain several projects that I would like to see implemented, projects I believe could have a positive impact on our hobby.

We need to emulate our sister hobby, philately, and develop a numismatic advisory panel, one with duties similar to those of the Philatelic Advisory Committee. Every postal issue must have the committee's approval. The burden of political pressure has been removed from congressional representatives. The choice of topic and design is not their prerogative. Final selection reflects the considered opinion of a blue-ribbon panel of philatelists, joined by artists and informed historians. Unlike numismatic issues, stamp designs are free of partisan politics. I hope to dedicate my remaining year in office toward the successful creation of a Numismatic Advisory Panel.

Next, but equally important, we must work toward stemming the drift toward declining membership. This can be realized only by providing advantages obtainable exclusively through ANA membership. While it is still a vital asset to membership, our journal, The Numismatist, is no longer a singular benefit. The commercial competition is providing an alternative. Here we must strive not only to be the best, but the most informative as well.

We need to find ways to take advantage of this exciting time called "The Computer Age." At the Orlando convention, a task force will be named to investigate the potential of the computer in the hands of the numismatist. Principally, we must avail ourselves of the technology of the 21st century and convert the benefits of the computer age to our own.

Technology exists today that will allow members to access the ANA Library tomorrow. Think of the advantages a little technology could offer. While security would prohibit access to the membership rolls, one could receive an instantaneous response from a calendar of events, or find coin club information such as meeting times and days along a proposed vacation itinerary. One could exchange numismatic information with fellow enthusiasts. Computer technology is such that one could project the image of a maverick item to other numismatists and solicit assistance in identification. The prospects are limited only by our imagination.

The year just past has not been without some achievements. A campaign pledge to reduce the costs of the annual Summer Conference has been fulfilled.

On a more subtle note, we have returned to a meaningful Association symbol: the "lamp of knowledge" once again graces our official seal in silent confirmation of the edict of our federal charter—that we are an educational organization.

No president can lead without the help and support of others. Thankfully, I have experienced the good fortune of having a most dedicated Board of Governors to turn to. It is to them and the scores of hard-working committee people, assisted by an equally dedicated headquarters staff, that I owe a debt of gratitude. Please take the time to read the reports that follow. For most, recognition of their accomplishments is their sole recompense.

Edward C. Rochette

A Challenge for the Future

THIS WAS A centennial year! ANA members and other numismatic collectors alike revelled in the charged atmosphere of this major celebration.

No one individual was responsible for the accomplishments of the ANA's centennial—although a number stand out. Rather, it was a combination of many members working in concert that made the celebration happen and created the success.

The centennial convention at the Rosemont/O'Hare Exposition Center, hard by Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, was one of the largest, if not the largest gathering of numismatists to date. More than 21,300 partic-

The centennial convention had 500 bourse dealers; some 20 government mints were represented. Numismatists vied to participate in the 70 hours of educational programs at the Numismatic Theatre and Educational Forum. To the awe of collectors, some of the finest exhibits of numismatic material were on display. It wasn't merely the superb quality of the items that were on display that dazzled visitors, but also the variety and number of exhibits.

Dealers had a very successful convention during a time when the country's economy was poor. Collectors could browse, purchase, trade and compare pieces and collections. Numismatists could enjoy hours of scintillating educational events.

The World Series of Numismatics was new and enjoyable. The most brilliant minds and personalities in numismatics put their knowledge and reputations on the line as they spent three evenings in jousting. There also was the Midway, which boasted hands-on displays by foreign mints, U.S. government agencies and security-printing companies, each seeking to clarify the arcane or difficult-to-understand processes of minting, security printing and banking in the minds of collectors.

The trade press—Krause Publications, Amos Press and Miller Magazines—greatly supported the ANA and its centennial. They labeled the ANA centennial convention a "collectors' convention" and a "return to the collector." These not only were encoiums, but they also presented a challenge to the ANA in planning future conventions.

The economy of the country has been poor as we struggle through a recession. The numismatic industry has been sorely hurt by this depressed economy. However, the ANA managed to trim its sails in December 1990. The budget for the centennial fiscal year was tight, yet the ANA weathered the economic storm and emerged stronger, both fiscally and as an institution.

Membership in the Association held rather steady during the year. As a result of the tight budget, less money was spent on marketing. The Austrian Mint offered a trip to Vienna and other prizes to those who secured the most new members during the centennial year.

The gavel of the ANA presidency changed hands in mid fiscal year.

Both Presidents Ken Hallenbeck and Ed Rochette believe in participatory government—bringing more collectors into the ANA and its workings. Ken stressed the international aspects of the hobby and the ANA, and the importance of legislation that would favor the hobby. Ed wants greater participation in and by clubs in our hobby and the ANA.

Consequently, the ANA staff has judiciously lengthened its outreach to individual members and clubs during the past year. We have examined the benefits to individuals and clubs in belonging to the ANA, and we have attempted to strengthen them.

The Educational Services Department has continued its quest to educate every collector. Introduction to Numismatics: An ANA Correspondence Course, revised and initiated in 1990, is the first in a new series of courses to educate collectors. The World Series of Numismatics is not only a contest, but also a means to educate and show the depths, meaning and enjoyment of numismatics. The concept of a daily, brief radio show was conceived and initially funded in this fiscal year. The

Mediation Service

The ANA's Mediation Service was created to arbitrate numismatically related disputes involving violations of Association bylaws. Free to members, the service is available to nonmembers for a $75 administrative fee. The aim of the service is to help maintain good relations between collector and dealer, thus insuring a healthy hobby.

ANA is working with the Professional Numismatists Guild (PNG) to produce a collectors' videotape to introduce the hobby to potential numismatists.

Young numismatists (YNs) boasted a strong year. Many events of the centennial convention were built around them. A YN auction was hosted by Ira Goldberg and Superior Stamp and Coin Company, and a YN Breakfast was underwritten largely by the PNG. Fourteen ANA scholarships were provided to YNs for this year's Summer Conference.

Consumer protection is a must in good as well as hard times. The Mediation Committee resolved more than 70 complaints. There were 677 telephone calls and 301 requests for information. Several Board members dedicated considerable time to managing the mediation program and advising on actions to be taken.

The ANA Museum of the ANA provided a unique display of the "Great Donations" to the Association. These numismatic gifts span several decades, and the exhibit provided much delight to visitors. The Gilroy Roberts Workshop and the accompanying short, videotaped interview with Roberts explaining the art of engraving have thrilled viewers.

The ANA Authentication Bureau (ANAAB) enjoyed spectacular success during the past year. A rare New England sixpence was but one of more than 1,000 coins submitted to ANAAB for authentication. This ANA member service is highly respected and, at this time, heightens the benefit of ANA membership.

The Numismatist continues to be the primary channel of information to members. Two new features were added this year—a thought-provoking "Heads or Tails" column, offering a forum for diverse opinions on major issues; and "Auction Insights," an informative monthly column by Bob Merrill, director of numismatic auctions for Heritage Rare Coin Galleries, the official auctioneer for the ANA anniversary sales through 1995.

The Resource Center continues to be accessed by serious authors and researchers, and also is used by general collectors eager to learn more about numismatics. The ANA's Library staff provides extensive information regarding a broad range of numismatic issues.

The ANA stands at the frontier of its second century. The challenge facing the ANA—as the premier hobby organization—is to educate and lead, and to establish an enjoyable atmosphere for our hobby. This charge is not lightly given or easily managed, but the challenge is incumbent upon all of us.

Financial Statements and Independent Auditors' Report

WE HAVE AUDITED the accompanying balance sheet of American Numismatic Association (the Association) (a not-for-profit corporation) as of March 31, 1992, and the related statements of support and revenue, expenses, and changes in fund balances and of cash flows for the year then ended. These financial statements are the responsibility of the Association's management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audit.

We conducted our audit in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audit provides a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, such financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Association at March 31, 1992, and the results of its operations and its cash flows for the year then ended in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

Our audit was made for the purpose of forming an opinion on the basic financial statements taken as a whole.

The supplemental schedule of changes in designated fund balances for the year ended March 31, 1992 is presented for the purpose of additional analysis and is not a required part of the basic financial statements. This schedule is the responsibility of the Association's management. Such schedule has been subjected to the auditing procedures applied in our audit of the basic financial statements and, in our opinion, is fairly stated in all material respects when considered in relation to the basic financial statements taken as a whole.

Notes to Financial Statements

I. SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

Organization

The American Numismatic Association (the Association) was organized in 1891 and was chartered by an act of Congress to advance the knowledge of numismatics, encourage communication and cooperation among numismatists, acquire and disseminate information bearing upon numismatists, and promote popular interest in the science of numismatology. The Association is considered to be the largest numismatic organization of its kind.

Federal Income Taxes

For Federal income tax purposes, the Association qualifies as a tax-exempt organization under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Fund Accounting

To ensure the observance of limitations and restrictions placed on the use of resources available to the Association, the accounts of the Association are maintained in accordance with the principles of fund accounting. The fund groups utilized by the Association are as follows:

General Fund—The General Fund is the general operations fund of the Association. It is used to account for all financial resources except those required to be accounted for in another fund.

Capital Assets Fund—The Capital Assets Fund is used to account for the property and equipment owned by the Association.

Museum Fund—The Museum Fund is used to account for the Association's collection of numismatic material and funds specifically designated for the Museum Fund.

Designated Fund—The Designated Fund is used to account for funds which are either restricted for a specific purpose by the donors of the funds or designated for a specific purpose by the Board of Governors.

Investments

Purchased investments are carried at cost and donated investments are carried at market value as of the date of gift. On an aggregate basis, the market value of the Association's investments exceeds their carrying value.

Inventories

The Association's inventories are stated at cost, on a specific identification basis.

Reference Grading Sets

Reference grading sets recorded in the Museum Fund are not depreciated as they are considered to be inexhaustible collections.

Property and Equipment

Property and equipment are stated at cost. Depreciation is provided on the straight-line and accelerated methods based upon the following estimated useful lives:

Buildings and land improvements	15-40 years
Furniture and equipment	5-20 years
Museum galleries and cases	5-20 years

Covenant Not to Compete

The covenant not to compete with the buyer of ANACS (see Note 7) is being amortized into support and revenue over a five-year period.

Deferred Life Membership Fees

Revenue recognition for life membership fees is deferred upon receipt and recognized over the estimated life of the membership. Such recognized revenue is included within membership dues and fees.

Statement of Cash Flows

For purpose of the statement of cash flows, the Association considers cash and all highly liquid investments purchased with a maturity of three months or less to be cash equivalents.

2. INVESTMENTS

Investments at March 31, 1992, consist of the following:

	CARRYING VALUE	MARKET VALUE
Common trust funds with bank:
Corporate stocks	$ 557,462	$ 893,763
Corporate bonds and notes	697,335	702,169
U.S. government obligation	49,281	50,891
Money market	385,454	385,454
Total common trust fund investments	1,689,532	2,032,277
Certificates of deposit—current	1,985,966	1,985,966
Donated corporate stock	340,675	1,001,254
Total investments—current	4,016,173	5,019,497
Certificates of deposit—long-term	2,479,252	2,479,252
Total investments	$6,495,425	$7,498,749

The donated corporate stock represents an equity interest in a closely-held corporation. The estimated fair market value of the donated corporate stock was determined on the basis of recent stock sales.

3. NUMISMATIC COLLECTION

The Association maintains a numismatic collection in its museum and library. The items included in the collection are not recorded as assets as their value is not subject to reasonable estimation.

The value of items acquired by donation, for which a value can be reasonably estimated, are reported as donations in the Museum Fund. Such accessions to the museum and the cost of purchased items are also reported separately as an expense to the Museum Fund. During the years ended March 31, 1992 and 1991, accessions totaled $96,204 and $1,032,892, respectively.

4. PROPERTY AND EQUIPMENT

Property and equipment consist of the following at March 31, 1992 and 1991:

	1992	1991
Buildings and land improvements	$1,829,060	$1,809,972
Furniture and equipment	1,068,156	1,059,509
Museum galleries and cases	278,155	278,155
Total	3,175,371	3,147,636
Less accumulated depreciation	2,148,033	2,002,712
Property and equipment—net	$1,027,338	$1,144,924

5. EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLANS

The Association has a noncontributory, defined benefit pension plan covering all employees who have completed at least 1,000 hours of service during a twelve consecutive month period and who have attained the age of 21. Contributions to the plan are actuarially determined using the Individual Aggregate Level Dollar Amount method. No contributions were made for the years ended March 31, 1992 and 1991. Accumulated plan benefits and plan net assets as of June 1, 1991, the most recent actuarial valuation date, are as follows:

Actuarial present value of accumulated plan benefits:
Vested	$207,033
Nonvested	71,381
Total	$278,414
Net assets available for benefits	$389,087

The assumed rate of return used in determining the actuarial present value of vested and nonvested accumulated plan benefits is 7.0 percent.

Net pension cost has not been computed in accordance with the provisions of Financial Accounting Standards Board Statement No. 87. However, net pension cost, as determined by Statement No. 87, would not be materially different from the recorded net pension cost.

Additionally, the Association has a deferred compensation plan that covers certain employees. Costs incurred for the funding of life insurance policies pursuant to this plan totaled $24,616 and $27,925 during the years ended March 31, 1992 and 1991, respectively, and were recorded as salaries and benefits in the General Fund.

6. COMMITMENT

The Association leases the land for its primary operating facilities under a 99-year operating lease which provides for lease payments of $1 per year. The lease expires on December 31, 2064, at which time the lease may be extended for an additional 99 years. Funds restricted by donors for future annual lease payments are maintained in the Designated Fund. Upon termination of the lease, the land and facilities will revert back to the lessor.

7. SALE OF ANACS

Effective July 31, 1990, the Association sold all of the assets and rights to its coin grading service, known as the American Numismatic Association Certification Service (ANACS). The assets sold included equipment with a net book value of $115,703 and supplies totaling $42,356.

As consideration for the ANACS assets and rights, the Association received $1,000,000 upon the closing of the sale and is receiving monthly royalty payments based on the volume of coins graded by the buyer. Such monthly royalties will be paid to the Association for a period of five years from the date of the closing and totaled $324,000 and $180,000 during the years ended March 31, 1992 and 1991, respectively. The Association is guaranteed minimum monthly royalties over the five-year period in amounts descending from $30,000 per month in the first year to $7,500 per month in the fifth year. The Association is recognizing royalty income as the royalty payments are received from the buyer.

Pursuant to the ANACS sale agreement, the Association received $500,000 in return for its covenant not to compete with the buyer for a period of five years. Additionally, in the event that the buyer elects to submit an application for a listing on the American Numismatic Exchange (ANE) electronic trading network, the Association is required to reimburse the buyer for the initial listing price of $50,000 and the first three monthly installments, not to exceed $5,000 per month. Other deferred revenue includes $65,000 to reflect this potential liability.

Gifts & Bequests

GIFTS AND BEQUESTS to the ANA totaled $68,667 (cash only) for Fiscal Year 1991-92 (April 1, 1991, through March 31, 1992), compared to a total of $124,287 for the previous fiscal year. Although the past fiscal year could be classified as a recession year, many very interesting and valuable gifts and bequests were received. All donors have been thanked for their generosity.

Gifts included coins, paper money and medals. A number of recent donations were displayed by the ANA at the 100th Anniversary Convention in Chicago and also at the 1992 Early Spring Convention in Dallas, Texas.

Cash and material donations received during the year are reported in The Numismatist. It is recommended that members refer to each monthly issue. Also included were valuable gifts of numismatic books.

All ANA members and friends of the ANA are encouraged to continue their generous support of the Association.

The committee wishes to thank the ANA headquarters staff for its strong support of this activity of the ANA.

ANA Government & Legislative Involvement

Bylaws

THE BYLAW AMENDMENTS adopted during Fiscal Year 1991-92 may be summarized as follows:

During the ANA Board meeting held in Chicago in August 1991, the ANA Board revised the bylaws in the following respects:

1) A provision was added authorizing the ANA Board to appoint one or more Assistant Treasurers (Article IV, Section 4(g)).

2) The bylaws were amended to require that the names of all ANA member clubs who submit nominations for candidates in ANA elections and the names of their nominees be published in the issues of The Numismatist for April through June, inclusive, of each election year and that the names of other nominators and their nominees shall not be so published (Article VI, Section 4).

3) The election procedure was modified to provide that the ballots and accompanying material may be transmitted by the use of first-class bulk rate, presorted postage to those members who qualify for domestic postal service (Article VI, Section 6).

During the Dallas Board meeting in February of 1992, the following bylaw amendments were adopted:

1) The ANA Bylaws provide in substance that the "principal officer of a company is subject to expulsion or suspension by reason of such company's failure to satisfy a valid complaint." At the inception of the Dallas meeting, the term "principal officer" was defined in the bylaws as follows:

The term "principal officer" of a company shall mean (1) any officer, manager, partner, owner or part-owner of that company who has authority to cause that company to satisfy a justified complaint; (2) any person who has been designated by that company as one of its principal officers in any application, communication or notice to the ANA; or (3) any person who has agreed to assume responsibility for satisfying the complaint against that company.

At the Dallas meeting, the Board deleted the second definition set forth above and substituted the following:

... any person who has been designated by that company as one of its officers in any advertisement, communication or other written instrument (Article III, Section 9).

2) At the inception of the Dallas meeting, Board meetings could be held by telephone only upon the written demand of five or more members of the ANA Board. This requirement was unnecessary, unduly burdensome and impractical. The ANA Board modified such procedure by permitting a telephone vote to be conducted at the direction of the President or at the written direction of two or more members of the Board of Governors (Article IV, Sections 10 and 12).

Legislation

THE LAST FISCAL year was extraordinarily busy. As legislative counsel, I was asked to testify before the Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage of the House Banking Committee, and offered testimony last year in July on the various commemorative coin programs offered by the Mint. The testimony pointed out that for a collector to acquire all of the coins offerred by the Mint would cost more than $3,400, which was excessive. The point has since been repeated by several members of Congress who are arguing strenuously in favor of oversight over the Mint's programs.

As legislative counsel, I also was asked to join a leadership committee honoring the occasion of the Mint's bicentennial. Earlier in the year, at the request of the New Jersey Numismatic Society, I assisted in the drafting of legislation that would have offered commemoration in a truly unique numismatic way of the Mint's bicentennial. We were, unfortunately, unable to secure Congressional sponsorship, and hence the proposal of the New Jersey Numismatic Society—to issue coins in a stylized design similar to that used in 1792—was never given consideration.

In addition, over the course of the year, several letters to the editor were prepared by the legislative counsel to correct erroneous impressions that were printed in the daily press. A letter to the editor appeared in The Wall Street Journal, the National Law Journal, and the New York Law Journal, which gave more accurate numismatic histories than those supplied by the authors.

Also during the course of the year, our office served the non-partisan purpose of consulting with the staff of several members of Congress who proposed legislation having numismatic impact. Our expertise also was drawn upon by the Industry Council for Tangible Assets (ICTA), a sister organization, relative to tax matters that are of concern to all numismatists.

The office of legislative counsel has developed a reputation for providing unbiased information when technical data is sought. The Congressional Budget Office, on seeking data on potential income from commemorative coin programs, consulted with me this year for the purpose of preparing a report that would accurately estimate for the first time both revenue potential and potential revenue loss under a variety of scenarios.

As the coinage redesign controversy swells, it is important to note that our Association is in no small way responsible. The office of legislative counsel did not originate the ANA's proposal to change the designs on American coinage; however, opinion has been sought from a variety of sources to provide factual background and other data that will no doubt have considerable impact and use on both sides of the debate.

David L. Ganz
Legislative Counsel

Your Committees at Work

COMPOSED OF FORMER elected ANA officers, the Advisory Council is not a large group in number, but it is large in terms of experience. The purpose of the group, according to Chairman Kenneth Hallenbeck, is to provide input to the ANA Board on matters of interest. Says Hallenbeck, "President Ed Rochette is to be commended for making the committee more meaningful and responsive than in the past. As former officers, we appreciate the opportunity to be of continuing service to the ANA and to feel that our opinions are still valued. We continue to stand ready to help the ANA."

The ANA Authentication Bureau (ANAAB) staff, working with more than a dozen consultants in specialized areas of numismatics, examines specimens submitted by members to determine if they are genuine. ANAAB Committee Chairman Anthony Swiatek reports that a highlight of this fiscal year for ANAAB was the submission and authentication of a New England silver sixpence, one of only eight genuine specimens known.

The Audio-Visual Committee, chaired by Donn Pearlman, has been quite busy this past fiscal year, with two exciting projects in production. The first, a daily radio program about the fascinating world of numismatics, potentially will reach millions of listeners across the country. The second, a coin-grading videotape, will teach the basics every collector should know about determining a coin's condition.

As head of the Awards Committee, Nancy Wilson works with the Board of Governors "to select people who are deserving of the many awards that are given out by the ANA." The committee makes recommendations as to guidelines for the selection process and reviews the many details involved in preparation of the actual awards.

Chairman Donn Pearlman reports that the Consumer Protection Committee "has been considering controversial questions confronting the entire hobby: 'How much is too much?' and 'When is enough?' Committee members—William Atkinson, Kenneth Bressett, Bernard Rome and Scott Travers—were asked to recommend what action, if any, the ANA should take regarding the proliferation of U.S. commemorative coins and their increased issue-price costs."

The Convention Committee, reports Chairman Grover Criswell, worked hard to make the Early Spring Convention in Dallas a success. It also cooperated with the Membership and Education Committees in planning an exciting anniversary convention in Orlando this August.

The Editorial Advisory Board, also led by Donn Pearlman, examines both the content and production of The Numismatist. "While the committee and the ANA Board want [the magazine] to be as cost effective as possible, everyone also wants to make sure it retains its high quality," reports Pearlman. "Cost considerations prevent The Numismatist from printing a full-color cover each month, but as circumstances and finances permit, you'll see more in the future."

Kenneth Bressett, chairman of the Education Committee, reports on the busy centennial year. In addition to the World Series of Numismatics and other special events at the Chicago convention, the 4th edition of Official A.N.A. Grading Standards for United States Coins was released, and work was begun on a new correspondence course.

The purpose of the Exhibit Committee, according to Chairman Joseph Boling, is "To encourage exhibiting by ANA members, both at annual conventions and at regional and local shows; to develop and maintain the rules under which ANA exhibit competitions are conducted; and to train judges for ANA conventions and for regional and local shows." The work of the committee is of prime importance because, says Boling, "Exhibiting is one of the principal educational activities of the ANA, second only to publishing."

The Library Committee, chaired by Florence Schook, promoted the availability to members and clubs of books, videotapes and slide sets from the ANA Resource Center.

The poor economy during Fiscal Year 1991-92 contributed to a decline in the number of new members recruited; however, the attrition rate also declined, indicates Membership Committee Chairman Kenneth Bressett. The recruiting contest, with prizes sponsored by the Austrian Mint, was the most successful promotion.

During this fiscal year the first computer listing of ANA Museum holdings was made available; the 257-page, 5,612-item inventory of U.S. coins is just a beginning, reports Museum Committee Chairman John Jay Pittman. The committee continues to build up and preserve the ANA's resources for numismatic study.

The Young Numismatists Committee, chaired by David Ganz, oversees programs to attract and retain YNs. Plans were made to expand the annual YN Auction by adding a separate mailbid section. Fourteen ANA scholarships—in addition to 10 scholarships funded by other groups—were extended to YNs for the Summer Conference. The Boy Scout Subcommittee worked on a model program for a Boy Scout Merit Badge Clinic. A new Girl Scout Subcommittee was formed to introduce the hobby of coin collecting to girls through the Girl Scout program. •

($10,000) demanded by law of the assayer and chief coiner. The assayer, Albion Coxe (or Cox), especially had trouble raising this sum. He had fled to England in the late 1780s to avoid imprisonment for debt and had returned to America in the spring of 1793 specifically to become assayer at the Philadelphia Mint. Coxe was no stranger to coinage, however, as he had been one of those involved in minting New Jersey coppers before his flight.

Despite appeals from Rittenhouse, the legislative wheels ground slowly. Finally, on March 3, Congress authorized lower bonds. The chief coiner now had to find sureties for $5,000, and the assayer only $1,000. The bonds were soon met (Rittenhouse was Voight's main financial backer), and definite plans could be made.

The first decision concerned the Liberty head on the silver coinage. It was decided, no doubt by Rittenhouse, Jefferson and Washington, that Wright's 1793 head of Liberty on the cent was ideal, except for the pole in the background. Scot was ordered to begin work on a pair of half dime dies using this head. The form of the eagle also was stipulated, perhaps drawn by Rittenhouse.

Half dime dies were duly executed by Scot, although they were used only for the striking of a few pattern coins; a unique copper specimen in the Smithsonian Institution is the sole reminder. (It is of interest to note that the denomination, "half disme," is spelled out on the coin, as on the 1792 coinage.) Rittenhouse now became involved in a dispute over whether denominations should appear on U.S. silver coins and, by extension, on gold coinage as well. In the end, the authorities opted to keep denominations off coinage.

This decision seems of little importance, until one realizes that in the early days of the republic there were two major views on foreign policy: one leaned toward France, the other favored England. The pro-British faction was led by Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton, while Thomas Jefferson was the main spokesman for the pro-French party.

As a result of a compromise reached between Jefferson and Hamilton, United States coins, with the exception of the cent and half cent, did not carry a mark of value on either of their faces, although lettering on the edges of the dollar and half dollar proclaimed the denomination. It was not until 1807 that denominations were added to the faces of gold and silver coinage.

It also was decided that U.S. coinage should display "coin" alignment, as on French coins of the 1790s (that is, the coin must be turned end over end to reveal a rightside-up reverse or obverse). English coinage, then and now, as well as modern Canadian coins, are struck in "medal" fashion (the coin must be turned side to side to properly show the obverse and reverse).

With the problems of denomination, design and alignment out of the way, Rittenhouse looked forward to beginning the silver coinage. He then made one of the few serious mistakes in his administration of the Mint.

Assayer Albion Coxé suggested to him that the legal fineness for silver, $1485/1664$ (.8924+), was too complicated and that .900 would be much easier to use. Coxé further claimed that silver coins of the legal fineness would turn black with daily use; the revised fineness, he said, would solve that problem. Incredibly, the Coxé proposal was accepted by Rittenhouse.

To hide the illegal change of standard (Jefferson, for example, was not informed), Rittenhouse retained the gross weight of the silver coins. In effect, this meant that too much silver would be used for each coin. No one profited by this bizarre arrangement, but the depositors certainly lost. One man, John Vaughn, was out over $2,000; he did not get his money back until 1800, and then only by a special Act of Congress.

Rittenhouse's strange decision had other ramifications. By law, the ratio of gold to silver in American coinage was 1 to 15 (1 ounce of gold equaled 15 ounces of silver), but now the ratio was more like 1 to 15.2. In hindsight, it appears that the key players in this odd drama did not understand the full implications of their actions. In all fairness to Rittenhouse, however, his health was very poor in 1794, and much of the time he was not even able to come to his office.

Although the Mint originally intended to begin silver coinage with the half dime, it was decided to start with the dollar instead. The dollar was the country's largest coin, and its issuance would bring the United States more prestige abroad.

Silver coinage began with the dollar in October 1794; however only 1,758 pieces were delivered because the press was not strong enough to fully bring up the design. Rittenhouse and Voight decided that a stronger press would have to be built; it was not finished until May 1795. In lieu of dollars, the Mint began to coin half dollars, but a breakdown of the rolling machines in early December brought coinage production to a halt. Workmen completed the repairs in early January 1795, and coinage resumed.

One of the endemic problems of the early Mint was manufacture of copper coinage. When the mintage of silver coins began, copper was pushed aside, despite the heavy demand for cents. The public demanded an investigation of the Mint; the House of Representatives agreed and appointed a committee, chaired by Elias Boudinot, to look into the complaints.

Boudinot conducted a thorough investigation, but never learned of the illegal silver standard. His report, presented in February 1795, was generally favorable to the Mint and accepted its views on most subjects. It was admitted, however, that the distribution of copper coins had been handled badly.

David Rittenhouse resigned at the end of June 1795 and was replaced by Henry William DeSaussure of South Carolina. The new director was involved in changing the design of the silver coinage from the Flowing Hair type to the Draped Bust type. It is generally agreed that famed artist Gilbert Stuart was responsible for the new head of Liberty, although it is uncertain what part DeSaussure played. It is likely, however, that Jefferson and Washington were the key people involved.

With the groundwork laid by Rittenhouse, DeSaussure was able to begin gold coinage at the end of July 1795. In September 1795, tired of renewed attacks on the Mint, DeSaussure announced his resignation, to take effect at the end of October. Elias Boudinot, who had chaired the investigation during the winter of 1794-95, was chosen in his place. The new director was horrified when he learned of the illegal silver standard and ordered an immediate change to the legal fineness.

Under both Boudinot and DeSaussure, a token coinage of copper coins was produced, but more had to be done. Because of political disturbances in Europe, the price of copper had risen again, and Boudinot was forced to recommend to the President that the weight of the copper coins be lowered once more.

"Key" coins are once again becoming the focus of Numismatics! The population reports issued by PCGS and NGC have made informed individuals acutely aware of how desirable and undervalued many truly rare and low population coins are when compared to most highly touted "generic" coins. I have been dealing exclusively in rare date gold coins for over a dozen years. My reputation and knowledge in this field is unsurpassed. I would be pleased to work with you to build your "World Class" collection or investment portfolio.

President Washington already had the legal authority to reduce the weight of the cent and half cent, and at the end of December 1795 he did just that. The weight of the cent dropped from 208 grains to 168 grains (10.89 grams), where it was to stay until the end of this coinage in 1857.

Boudinot spent a great deal of time trying to solve the copper problem, but did not succeed until 1798, when he persuaded Matthew Boulton to prepare ready-made planchets in England and ship them to Philadelphia. From 1796 to 1798, the Mint punched its planchets almost exclusively from sheet copper, selling the remnants as scrap.

The deposits of gold and silver dropped alarmingly during 1796 and 1797. In the latter year, however, Boudinot was able to make an agreement with the Bank of the United States to furnish gold and silver bullion to the Mint. Beginning in 1799 the Mint had, for the first time, a sufficient supply of gold, silver and copper for coinage. •

Bright Idea

At your next club meeting, tape over the grade on a slabbed coin and allow the membership to guess the grade. (This is particularly challenging with a split-grade circulated or low-grade proof.) The individual who correctly determines the grade wins the coin.

Winners feel a sense of accomplishment when they receive a prize that they have earned, rather than simply being selected in a raffle or drawing for door prizes.

Numismatic Articles

American colonial medals.

One of these medals was the coin-sized Pitt "halfpenny" token struck to celebrate the repeal of the Stamp Act and dated 1766. The Washington medal commemorating the Evacuation of Boston by the British, described in detail in Mease as Item #4, is specifically included by reference in Fisher as his Item #2. With that exception, there are no medals previously listed in Mease that are included or referred to in Fisher, even though his title was "Description of American Medals." The 1837 Fisher publication uses the word "obverse" consistently and does not use "face." Other technical numismatic terms used by Mease are consistently retained in Fisher's presentation.

In 1838 there appeared another numismatic article by Mease entitled "Old American Coins." It is described by its author as comprising some American coins issued before the establishment of the Constitutional government of the United States. It is the first numismatic article about American coins published in America and is included in Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society (Third Series, Vol. VII, pp. 282-83 [Boston, 1838]). It describes nine copper coins, namely, the Bar cent, a 1722 Rosa Americana, a 1787 Fugio cent, a 1788 Massachusetts cent, a Conder token, a 1785 Nova Constellatio copper, a New Jersey copper, a 1787 Connecticut copper and a 1773 Virginia halfpenny. The status of that article and its content seem so important and unknown that its entire text is separately included as part of this commentary. The description of the Bar cent in Mease's listing is extremely probative, as that coin's only prior known mention appears to be in the December 19, 1785, New Jersey Gazette (Trenton).

The Conder token is described as having such a poorly cut date that it cannot be read. Its legends and description show that its date is 1794 (not 1784), and it was subsequently classified as Dalton & Hammer, Cork #14.

The 1722 Rosa Americana is commented upon as being a similar type to a coin found in the ground while digging the foundation for St. Phillips Church in Charleston, South Carolina, in 1835. Another Rosa Americana coin found in April 1835 in a garden in Washington, Pennsylvania, near Brooke County, West Virginia (then Virginia), also is mentioned. Both of these finds were reported in newspapers that future researchers may be able to locate.

The New Jersey copper is given the non-existent date of 1785, the understandable error attributable to the unclear die cutting of the last numeral of the date on many of the 1786 New Jersey pieces.

The most spectacular comment concerns the copper coinage of Connecticut. Mease states, "This is the old farthing of our boyhood." Mease was born in 1771 and was 14 years of age when the first Connecticut coppers were minted and 16 years of age when the plethora of 1787 coppers were struck. He lived in Philadelphia. The major collapse of the circulating value of Connecticut and most other circulating coppers occurred in the middle of 1789, whereupon the exchange rate of coppers in New York money of account was set by both the City of New York and the City of Albany at 48 to the shilling or a farthing New York money of account for each copper.

Almost a year later, on June 7, 1790, a committee report to the General Assembly of New Jersey confirms a similar value for Connecticut and counterfeit British coppers by stating that they can be bought at 45 to the shilling for overstriking with New Jersey dies. It also states that such coppers pass from 48 to 36 for a shilling, if at all. New Jersey money of account was valued at the same rate as that of Pennsylvania.

Mease's use of the word "farthing" is the only known application of the word to any coppers then in circulation in the United States, including the Connecticut coppers. It is used by one who actually circulated Connecticut coppers. Mease lived in Philadelphia, and even though Pennsylvania money of account was 7 shillings 6 pence to the Spanish dollar—in contrast to New York money of account at 8 shillings to the Spanish dollar—he indicated that such coppers were accepted for a farthing in Pennsylvania money of account.

This confirms the actuality of an exchange rate for coppers conforming generally to the 1789 New York municipality recommendations. It is amusing to realize that American or British counterfeits of British halfpence were circulating in America at that time, apparently as farthings in money of account, as there were no actual

Comparison with Foreign Publications on American Money

EARLY NUMISMATIC PUBLICATIONS in England such as Pepys, Leake, Haym (the Pembroke Collection), Snelling, Ruding and others include some early American coins issued prior to the American Revolution, but nothing numismatic seems to have been published prior to 1838 in Europe covering American coinage after American independence, except perhaps the description of the 1776 Continental Currency pewter coinage by Richard Watson in Chemical Essays (Vol. IV, pp. 135-37 [London, 1786]).

Various European exchange books include American coins minted after independence², but these books cannot be construed to be numismatic in nature, and they customarily excluded copper coins.

The Rediscovery

HOW WERE THE Mease and Fisher items located when they do not seem to be indexed or included in present numismatic bibliographies or libraries? The answer is the detailed information included in the catalog of one of George F. Kolbe's numismatic book auctions. Lot #450 in his December 8, 1991, catalog was Norton's Literary Letter No. 3 (New York, 1859), containing the first published address given at the American Numismatic Society. The discourse by William S. Fredrick Mayers, who died in China in 1878, was entitled "The Literature of American Numismatics" and was presented to members of the American Numismatic Society on November 19, 1858, in New York during the first year of that society's existence. The American Numismatic Society 1858-1958 by Howard L. Adelson records the event, but not the publication of Mayers' talk.

The content of "The Literature of American Numismatics" features the great progress of American numismatic investigation and states that in 1843 knowledge of American numismatics was confined to a very few individuals in the United States, in comparison to a greater number in England. Mayers mentions that American coin collectors were then being referred to as "monomaniacs." The discourse then notes the deep interest of Mease and Fisher in American numismatics and the publication of their work by the societies of which they were members. Specific citations are given for their articles as published in 1821, 1834, 1837 and 1838. There was no reference to Humphreys' 1787 article about American medals printed in The American Museum, but Bordley's 1789 pamphlet was cited.

Acknowledgment

BEING UNAWARE OF the Mease and Fisher material, the mention of it in Kolbe's description of the Mayers' item piqued my curiosity. A visit to a historical library opened a new vista for me. I had merely rediscovered what Mayers already had carefully expostulated 134 years before. I thank George F. Kolbe for creating that opportunity.

I also am grateful to Thomas D. Serfass, Michael J. Hodder, Phil Lapsansky and Francis D. Campbell for their suggestions and cooperation.

If someone else since 1859 has pointed out or cited the Mease and Fisher numismatic literary contributions, I will be glad to apologize.

Old Coin Tubes Can Cause Problems

A PROBLEM CONCERNING plastic storage tubes for coins is the focus of this month's column. However, the solution is relatively simple, as you will see.

Q. More than 20 years ago during the "rolls" craze, I, like many other collectors, purchased the then-prevalent plastic tubes and caps to contain my uncirculated coin rolls. Use of these tubes was extremely common, although neither their chemical composition nor how they aged was known.

After all these years, I have discovered that the tubes have shrunk so much that the coins are sealed inside and are impossible to budge. From cents to dollars, both circulated and uncirculated, all are tightly wedged in their tubes. Have you heard of other collectors in similar straits, and do you have a solution for my problem?

—G.D., Illinois

A. You bet! It's a fairly common problem, though I was very perplexed when I first encountered it. The particular tubes you mention are, I believe, no longer available. Tubes on the market today should not shrink with age, and they are made of chemically inert materials (although when in doubt, write to the manufacturer and ask about the tubes' composition).

The problem tubes referred to here had relatively thin walls and were capped on both ends. They were common in the 1960s, and it is not unusual to find coins today stored in such tubes.

When attempting to remove coins from one of these shrunken tubes, I first try to peel the tube away from the coins, just as a cashier might tear away the paper wrapper on a bank-wrapped roll. This method works well only if the plastic still has some "give."

If the plastic has hardened further, place the entire tube in the freezer, being careful not to get any ice or water on the coins, and leave it there for a few hours or overnight. Once frozen, the tube will shatter and release its contents when tapped lightly with a hammer or similar object. However, use care! Promptly remove any pieces that break away, as they can damage the coins inside.

Q. I enjoyed your column about coin preservation in the April 1992 issue (p. 554) and your mention of the deterioration of some brands of polybags. I store my ancient coins in a polyethylene envelope manufactured by E & T Kointainer and then insert the polybag in a Saflip™ (a brand of mylar flip). What is your opinion of this method for long-term storage?

—J.B., Pennsylvania

A. I store some of my own coins in a similar fashion. However, certain brands of polybags, usually manufactured overseas, eventually deteriorate and leave a fine powder on the surface of the coins. Using a known, reliable brand of polybag or changing the polybags every couple of years should eliminate this problem. For long-term storage I think your method is fine. As with any type of coin holder, check your coins every few months.

Thanks for your questions—keep them coming! Address your comments to me in care of The Numismatist, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, Fax 719/634-4085. Remember to include a business-size, self-addressed, stamped envelope if you wish to receive a personal reply. •

BRONZES OF MITHRADATES VI OF PONTUS

THE LAST GREAT HELLENISTIC KING

Mithradates VI Eupator Dionysos (120-63 B.C.), king of Pontus on the southern shore of the Black Sea, was the last Hellenistic king to be wholly independent of Rome. At the height of his power, he ruled an empire that extended from the Crimea to the north, to Byzantium to the southwest, Colchis to the southeast, and Cappadocia to the south. Regarding Mithradates as a threat to her authority in the East, Rome fought three bitter wars (89-85 B.C., 83-82 B.C., and 74-63 B.C.) to subdue this proud monarch, who committed suicide rather than submit to Roman authority. The most infamous example of the savagery of these wars occurred in 88 B.C. In an effort to totally eradicate Roman influence in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), Mithradates ordered the slaughter of all Romans and Italians and their families in the cities under his control. Known as the "Asian Vespers," the massacre claimed between 80,000 and 150,000 people according to ancient sources.

Mithradates, whose family origins can be traced to Persian nobility, claimed descent from Darius I of Persia and from Alexander the Great and Seleucus I. By claiming this dual descent, Mithradates presented himself to his Asiatic subjects as the eastern king foretold in prophecies who would drive out the invaders from the West (i.e. the Romans), and to his Greek subjects as the champion of hellenism against the Roman barbarians. Portraits of the king depicted him as the new Alexander.

Bronze coins issued by the cities under Mithradates' control bore the themes of the king's propaganda. The hero Perseus figures prominently on this coinage. Perseus, slayer of the Gorgon Medusa, was claimed as an ancestor both by Alexander the Great and by the kings of Persia. Ares, the Greek god of war also appears on the bronzes, as does Nike, goddess of Victory. The appearance of these two divinities from the Greek pantheon on the coinage of Mithradates was especially appropriate to a king whose lifetime was largely spent waging war in the pursuit of victory over the Romans. Thus, these bronzes symbolized Mithradates links to the Greek and Persian worlds and his attempt to be a bridge between those two worlds.

Due to a recent purchase, we are able to offer two major types of these interesting bronzes. These types were struck at a number of cities in the kingdom, such as the port of Amisus on the southern shore of the Black Sea.

A Counterfeit 1942/41 Dime

A COUNTERFEIT 1942/41 10-cent piece recently examined by the American Numismatic Association Authentication Bureau (ANAAB) has the distinction of being the only die-struck counterfeit of the entire Mercury dime series. Bogus 1916-D, 1921 and 1942/41 dimes are mintmark and date alterations.

A product of transfer dies, this piece suffers from the classic problems created in the process of making die-struck counterfeits. The entire coin exhibits a loss of detail; the lettering is rounded and lacks crispness. (For further details about transfer dies, see the February 1992 issue of The Numismatist, p. 267.)

original die detail can be duplicated by the transfer process, the collar must be made from scratch. In comparison to a genuine dime, the counterfeit 1942/41 dime has thinner reeds with more squared edges, as well as a higher reed count.

Most transfer-die counterfeits display depressions and/or raised metal, repeating anomalies that are crucial to the detection of these bogus coins. These characteristics usually reflect damage transferred from the host coin used to produce the counterfeit die. The chances of finding two coins with haphazard damage in the exact same configuration are extremely low.

Remember, a counterfeiter usually chooses the most perfect coin available

Actual Size: 17.91mm

The entire design and lettering on this counterfeit 1942/41 Mercury dime exhibits a loss of detail. Numerals in the date are blurry, rounded and in low relief.

for the host coin. As collectors know, finding perfection is virtually impossible. There will always be some defect that will be passed along to the counterfeit dies and onto the coin produced from them.

On the counterfeit 1942/41 Mercury dime, a die crack is noticeable at the wing on the obverse. This die crack resulted during production of the counterfeit; it is not a transfer from the host coin. What is disturbing is that several examples have been found without this die crack. This means that anywhere from several hundred to thousands of examples of this counterfeit dime may be out there. I have personally seen more than 30 examples.

For more information about the counterfeit 1942/41 Mercury dime or other questionable coins, contact ANAAB, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, telephone 719/632-2646. •

It is evident that the counterfeiter did little to match the genuine reeding (top) in size or quantity.

Examples of the counterfeit 1942/41 Mercury dime are known with (left) and without a die crack to the right of the wing on the obverse, evidence that many such pieces were made.

GENERAL

The American Numismatic Association Authentication Bureau:

- Renders an opinion whether a numismatic item is genuine or otherwise, including authenticating of all coins (U.S., foreign, ancient) tokens, medals, and paper money (including obsolete U.S.).
- Issues a photo certificate with a registration number on genuine items.
- Cannot determine valuations of items—values must be supplied by the submitter.
- Fee schedule: $23 per coin for specimens valued up to $4,999 each. For items valued at $5,000 or more the cost is $40 per specimen. Genuine and counterfeit determinations will be at full charge. Sufficient return postage must be included with each submission. Postage only will be billed if no decision is reached.
- Provides reference attributions if possible.
- Uses its network of numismatic experts on a consulting basis for those items requiring additional examination and opinions.
- Provides counterfeit diagnostics on non-genuine specimens.
- Provides certification services for ANA members only.
- Provides additional information on membership services.

ADMINISTRATIVE

- Please submit coins in easy access holders. Mark holders with matching submission numbers.
- ANA will provide free insurance up to $1000 per coin (average). Shipments valued higher are charged $1.00 per thousand dollars of excess valuation. Fill out one Excess Insurance worksheet per order (see below).
- The ANA fee structure is predicated in part on accurate valuation of coins for insurance purposes. Overvaluation, even within the stated limits, raises costs and may result in a rate increase.
- Payment is due in full with order. Coins will not be processed until payment is received.

PHOTO CERTIFICATE

- A photo certificate will be issued for newly authenticated items and for reexamination and transfer of previously authenticated items submitted to ANACS prior to August 1, 1990.

AUCTION INSIGHTS BY BOB MERRILL

Confidence Is the Key

It is an often-asked question: How does one become a successful auction bidder? Frankly, there are no easy answers. All the charts, graphs and publications do not substitute for that one characteristic necessary for success: confidence.

Ever hear of anyone buying a new car without a salesman? What if you went into a showroom, looked over the vehicle in question and then said you would pay a given amount. Think you could do it?

The same is somewhat true of an auction. No one is going to try to sell you a certain lot. You have to decide, and you must have enough faith in your own ability to feel comfortable about outbidding everyone else in the room. It gets awfully lonely when yours is the last hand among a room full of bidders.

Some years ago, several rolls of 1901-S Liberty eagles were consigned to our auctions. We broke the rolls into three-piece lots and spread them over six sales. At every auction, Andy Lustig of New Jersey inevitably bought the majority of these offerings. One evening at a break in the gold section, I asked Andy about his aggressiveness. With total confidence, he replied that he felt comfortable with his analysis of the lots, and even though other bidders kidded him about paying so much, he was willing to risk his money to back his opinion.

There is a standing comment heard after every sale: "I was the underbidder on lot X." A lot of people say this as if it were a badge of honor. But in reality, you see, there is no risk in being the underbidder; only the winning bidder assumes the risk of new ownership. Granted, everyone sees coins differently. If this were not true, they would not trade hands among dealers as freely as they do.

At one of our sales last spring, a very aggressive David Liljestrand of Kansas was a successful bidder. His technique requires a full dose ofchutzpah. Say a particular lot is worth $1,200 and opens at $400 (which incidentally, does not mean that this is the top book bid, as it is our policy to open a lot at 5 to 10 percent above the second highest bid). The auctioneer asks for $425 ("four and a Q" in Texas terminology), and David yells out $900 or so. Immediately, a number of competitors are run off. Even though David may eventually have to pay $1,100, $1,200 or whatever, he dispenses with some of his potential competitors. David says, "You are not going to buy a $1,200 coin for $425 in a major auction, so why waste time?"

The great collections of yesteryear were formed by buyers willing to make a statement. The "good deal" buyers aren't going to acquire much; competition at public auction is far too high.

My succinct advice to you is: study, study, study. Don't try to learn every series. Pick a few that interest you most, and then spend $300 on books and periodicals and study some more.

When you view lots, allow sufficient time. Many bidders put off lot review until the last moment, the result being that what they want to see may not be available. When you get to the auction, have your bids already figured. If a property is worth $1,800 to you, stop there; otherwise you've just caught "auction fever." And remember, auction sales to floor bidders are final. If you win the bid, it's yours.

Auctions are a lot of fun, but are really exciting when you can walk away with several lots and feel confident about what you have won. •

Bob Merrill has served as auction director for Heritage Numismatic Auctions in Dallas, Texas, since 1976. Previously, he taught history at a Dallas junior college. Heritage, selected as the official auctioneer for ANA anniversary convention sales through 1995, has conducted more ANA auctions since 1980 than all other firms combined.

CURATOR'S CORNER

BY ROBERT W. HOGE

A Life Member's Legacy: The Bailey Bequest

A museum can preserve and promote the personal interests of those who have passed away by caring for their collections and using them to foster the educational pursuits of posterity, so that others may share in the enjoyment and knowledge gained by the former owner. The bequest of the numismatic estate of ANA Life Member Howard E. Bailey, who died last fall, represents an excellent example of one man's legacy to his fellow collectors and enthusiasts.

Howard was a generous benefactor whose memory will live on in the numismatic collection that he loved. He had participated in more ANA Summer Conference classes than anyone, having missed only one since their inception in 1969. In fact, he came to Colorado Springs last year to be in the class I taught on coinage of the ancient world, even though he knew he was in the advanced stages of his mortal illness.

Among his varied interests, Howard was especially proud of his collection of coins of the Parthian Kingdom, which he brought to the Museum to show to me. He would be pleased to know that it is here to be appreciated by all those who have a curiosity about the history of past civilizations.

A Laodicea mint silver drachm of Phraates IV (c. 38-2 B.C.), this specimen is an essentially mint-state coin with strong, bold relief and a clear "royal wart" on the king's forehead (ANA Museum Accession No. 1992.16.17).

A handsome, extremely fine coin, this silver drachm of Arsaces II (c. 211-191 B.C.), possibly produced at the mint of Rhagae-Arsacia, shows a portrait of the king, wearing the traditional bashlyk headdress of the steppe people, and the dynasty's founder as a seated archer (ANA Museum Accession No. 1992.16.1).

I have chosen to feature two of Howard's favorite Parthian drachms this month, but it is important for members to know that these represent only a minute part of his collection, which numbered well over 11,000 pieces. Besides the 30 Parthian specimens, there are other ancient, medieval, oriental and early modern coins; a variety of foreign issues, including many recent proof and mint sets; some excellent United States issues, among them gold pieces, proof sets and commemoratives; and a comprehensive set of Franklin Mint products. Howard's library, numbering 65 cartons of books and other literature, also was bequeathed to the ANA, furthering the contribution that his life has made to the field that fascinated him. •

The Internal Revenue Service has formally determined that the American Numismatic Association is a tax-exempt organization under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. Therefore, all donations—both of cash and of material with established "fair market value"—qualify as charitable contributions for income tax purposes. Additional information can be obtained from the Museum of the American Numismatic Association, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279.

Information for Authors

The mission of The Numismatist, the official publication of the American Numismatic Association, is to educate and provide a forum for the interchange of ideas. It serves as a refreshing review for the experienced collector and as an introduction to essential concepts for the less experienced. The staff and contributing editors of The Numismatist welcome the opportunity to review well-written, well-conceived articles displaying original, documented research.

Authors of articles published in the magazine receive $2.75 per column inch, with bonuses available to those who provide usable photographs or illustrations and/or furnish material for photographic reproduction. Incidental expenses incurred by the author in preparation of an article may be reimbursed, subject to prior approval.

Published articles also are eligible for the Heath Literary Award, which is presented annually to authors whose articles are judged outstanding contributions to The Numismatist. A silver medal and $250 is awarded for first place, a bronze medal and $100 for second place, and a bronze medal for third place. Authors receiving honorable mention receive certificates of recognition. Articles displaying original and comprehensive research in U.S. numismatics are eligible for the Wayte and Olga Raymond Memorial Award, which includes a prize of $400 for first place and $200 for second place.

MANUSCRIPTS

Manuscripts should be relevant to the study of numismatics, present new information, and constitute a contribution to numismatic education. The author is directly responsible for all statements made in the manuscript. The American Numismatic Association purchases First North American Serial Rights. Manuscripts are accepted with the understanding that they have not been submitted to or published by other publications.

Manuscripts should be typed and double-spaced, preferably on 8½ x 11-inch, white bond paper, with 1½-inch margins on all sides. The author's name and full street address must appear on the first page, along with day and evening telephone numbers, and, if available, FAX number. Authors are encouraged to limit the length of their articles to 4 to 12 typewritten pages. Manuscripts, including illustrations (photographs, drawings, graphs, etc.), should be sent to the Editor, The Numismatist, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279. The author should retain one copy of the manuscript for reference. The Publications Department reserves the right to edit all material.

ILLUSTRATIONS

Legends or captions for illustrations should be typed on a separate sheet of paper, with a number that accurately corresponds to each illustration. Photographs, preferably high-quality, black-and-white glossy prints, should not be attached to the manuscript. The face of the photograph should not be retouched or labeled in any way. To avoid damaging the surface of the photograph when labeling the back, write on a hard surface and use only a soft pencil or permanent marker. Authors are encouraged to list sources of illustrations.

If an author lacks photographic facilities, numismatic material can be sent to The Numismatist for reproduction.

AUTHOR'S BIOGRAPHY

Authors should submit a brief biography (100 words or less) that includes pertinent information, such as place of birth, educational and professional background, hobby interests and affiliations, and numismatic awards or accomplishments.

SOURCES

Authors are requested to cite sources used in the preparation of their articles in the manner described below:

Filling the Coin Void—Part Two

DESPITE UNDERWHELMING response to last year's survey (two letters, one phone call), this column presents its second PASSE rare coin investment analysis. (For the first wallet-grabbing survey, see the October 1991 issue of The Numismatist, p. 1688.)

PASSE is "Pearlman's Annual Selected Slabs Evaluation," an absolutely accurate, entirely unbiased and totally reliable indicator of how well (or how poorly) the rare coin market is performing. Trust me.

This essential information is provided free, a service that alone certainly is worth your annual ANA membership dues—unless you're a life member, and then the annualized cost benefit can be correctly determined only by prominent large cent specialist Denis W. Loring, a life insurance company actuary, repeatedly punching complicated numbers into a very expensive portable computer.

For those who just tuned in, the PASSE index was designed to fill the void created when Salomon Brothers, the Wall Street brokerage house, abruptly stopped listing rare coins in its annual tangible assets survey. Without that much-quoted portion of the index, some numismatic telemarketers were forced to start touting rare postage stamps as sure-fire investments. It was a rude kick in the assets.

Officials at Salomon Brothers did not include rare coins this year either, apparently because they still fear such a listing may lead to telemarketing abuses. However, their index continues to list federal government securities, an area in which Salomon has first-hand knowledge of abuses. The company recently paid $290 million in fines, forfeitures and victims' compensation funds to settle fraud charges from its naughty role in last year's Treasury bond auction scandal.

(To put that staggering amount into perspective, consider the figures compiled by Krause Publications' authoritative Auction Prices Realized. For $290 million, Salomon Brothers could have purchased every coin sold at every major U.S. rare coin auction in 1991—and still would have had $231,563,227 left over to dabble in T-bonds.)

Anyway, to prevent a nationwide outbreak of severe scalp wounds from bewildered investors scratching their heads, wondering about the status of their numismatic portfolios, the PASSE index was developed to track noteworthy value gains and losses of PCGS-encapsulated ("slabbed") coins.

With permission to quote from the respected Certified Coin Dealer newsletter (P.O. Box 11099, Torrance, CA 90510), here are this year's results: United States rare coins soared 40 percent in value. They also fell 46 percent.

Below are five of the best and five of the worst performers with their price increases or decreases from June 1991 through May 1992.

Liberty Seated "No Drapery" half dime, MS-62 ($244 to $410); Indian cent, copper-nickel, MS-64 ($194 to $274); 1936 Washington 25 cents, Proof-64 ($410 to $550); Barber half dollar, MS-62 ($412 to $540); 1928-S Buffalo 5 cents, MS-64 ($570 to $735); 1892 World's Columbian Exposition 50 cents, MS-65 ($3,820 to $1,150); 1942-P Jefferson "War" 5 cents, Proof-67 ($1,100 to $585); 1893 Isabella 25 cents, MS-64 ($2,300 to $1,380); Liberty $20, Type I, MS-63 ($9,900 to $6,000); 1889-S $1, MS-65 ($1,650 to $1,100).

Instead of trying to corner the Treasury bond market, Salomon Brothers could have invested $290 million in those first five rare coins. That would have generated about $400 million, enough to pay Uncle Sam's penalties and have a few bucks left over to visit the ANA convention in Orlando this month.

Can you envision the television commercial: "Mr. Wall Streeter, you've just made a fabulous 40-percent return on your numismatic investments! What are you going to do now, go to Disney World?"

"No, thanks. I've already been to Fantasy Land." •

"When I saw your ad in the paper for 'Barber Quarters,' I thought . . ."

A Numismatic First

The International Olympic Committee has commissioned five prestigious mints to create an unprecedented Centennial Coin series.

Never before have five national mints joined together to create official coins with the same specifications. And never has the International Olympic Committee (IOC) commissioned the minting of a coin series...until now. Starting in 1992, the IOC is commemorating one of the most important forces for peace and solidarity in the world: the Olympic Movement.

"As an American, I'm proud of our athletes' contributions to the worldwide Olympic Movement. It makes me equally proud to be an American member of the IOC team that is creating these Centennial Coins. It is what the collector has been crying out for—an unprecedented, highly collectible, and historically significant coin program."

Donna Pope, Former Director,
United States Mint

In celebration, the national mints of Canada, Australia, France, Austria and Greece have cooperated in the design and minting of an extraordinary coin series. From 1992 to 1996, three proof coins, one gold and two silver, will be issued each year from a different national mint. The first three IOC Centennial Coins, issued by the Royal Canadian Mint, are available now.

The effigy of Queen Elizabeth II graces the obverse of each Canadian coin, and each reverse carries a masterful engraving that celebrates an Olympic event or theme.

On the gold coin, "The Olympic Flame" burns brightly. Before the Olympic Games begin, this eternal flame is carried symbolically to the Host City—a reminder for millions of the noble Olympic Ideal. On the first silver coin, a speed skater, pole vaulter and gymnast strive to meet the challenge of the Olympic motto: "Citius Altius Fortius" (faster, higher, stronger). And the companion silver coin depicts the "Spirit of the Generations" as athletes of the past and present encourage athletes of the future to pursue the Olympic dream.

Each of your IOC Centennial Coins comes in a protective capsule to preserve it for generations to come. You'll also receive a luxurious burgundy display case with your coins, and each coin is accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity signed by the President of the IOC and the head of the issuing mint. These coins are sure to enrich any collection, and serve as a treasured reminder of the glory and excitement of the Olympic Games.

FROM COLLECTOR TO INVESTOR

The most trusted grading service available

For many of today's numismatists coin collecting started at a young age with the discovery of a few 'old' nickles or pennies.

As we grew older the excitement of finding, trading and collecting coins stayed with us.

Eventually, the hobby became a business and the business grew into an industry.

At NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA (NGC), we are committed to advancing numismatics—both as a hobby and as a business.

THE CREDIBLE SOURCE FOR SUPERIOR, CONSISTENT COIN GRADING SERVICES.

Now dealers, collectors, and investors can be confident that they will receive consistent coin grading time after time.

The NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA, with over 500 charter and associate members, provides the industry with an independent, credible, and superior coin grading service.

The Ranks of the "Old Guard" Are Thinning

MY WORDS TODAY are not meant to be an obituary. The statistical recount of one's life is best served when published on pages so reserved for such notice. While attending funerals, we are given long moments to reflect, and it is upon these reflections that I write.

A sizable crowd gathered in the West Center Chapel to hear the requiem for Aubrey Bebee. It comprised mostly family and friends. For a man who had contributed so much to the hobby, the cadre of collectors among the mourners was small. Perhaps it was because Aubrey Bebee, at age 85, had outlived most of his contemporaries.

The ANA Board was represented at the service. Governors Kenneth Bressett and Grover C. Criswell were there. Vice President David Ganz joined us, as did Convention Director Ruthann Brettell and ANA Sergeant-at-Arms John J. Gabarron. But, aside from the ANA family, I recognized only a few other collectors among those who had come to Omaha to pay their respects. Most were of later generations. Aubrey Bebee, I came to realize, was among the thinning ranks of the "Old Guard," coin dealers who practiced the trade during the years immediately preceding World War II and gave meaning to the term "professional numismatist."

Aubrey, along with his wife, Adeline, rank as this Association's greatest benefactors. The wealth of numismatic rarities and treasures that they wholeheartedly gave will be exhibited and studied to the benefit of the hobby for years to come. Although he led a full and active life almost up to the very end, had the long and loving companionship of one who shared his interests, and was most successful in business, there was a tragedy in his passing. Reverend John Ashley of Omaha's Calvary Baptist Church said it so well, and in words that give us reason to reflect: "Aubrey Bebee took with him a lifetime of numismatic history and knowledge."

Took with him. Now it is a time for others to reflect. Look around at your next club meeting. Recognize the Old Guard among your fellow members? Consider the store of numismatic knowledge they possess. What a tragedy it will be when they take their memories and experiences with them.

One may safely venture to state that with most coin clubs today, the organizational history and the founding anecdotes, save a few scant written references, are recorded only within the memory of your Old Guard. There can be little excuse in this day of tape recorders and video cameras for not recording an oral or visual history of your club.

Your club may not have had a day in 1967 when, at Bal Harbour, Florida, a member set a new record paid for a coin anywhere at auction—$46,000—for the J.V. McDermott specimen of the 1913 Liberty Head nickel. Nor may it boast that a member gave a foremost collection of U.S. paper money—one valued in excess of $2 million—to the national organization. Or, for that matter, added the specimen of the 1913 Liberty Head nickel that he had purchased at the 1967 convention to the Museum of the American Numismatic Association. Then, for good measure, threw in the Idler specimen of the "King of American Coins"—an 1804 silver dollar—let alone add an elusive Kellogg and Company $20 pioneer gold piece to the hundreds of coins he had already given.

Oral histories are not meant to be measured in dollars and cents, but in personal experiences and adventures. Video or taped interviews may, on the surface, seem mundane—but only to those who have been around for such a long time that their personal contributions are taken for granted. That, too, is a tragedy.

While your Old Guard may not be able to bequeath millions of dollars in coins and currency to your organization, they can leave a legacy that cannot be measured in money. They can leave a recorded history to be shared with generations to come, to be shared by those who never had the privilege of meeting them while they lived. •

Aubrey Bebee

Women in Numismatics

"... there are still a few 'turn-of-the-century' cohorts who seem to see women ... as a threat."

—Gloria Peters, WIN Editor
Partner, P & M Rare Coins

"Characteristically, women constitute less than 10 percent of the active hobby community."

—Phil Casey
Collector

FOR FELLOW NUMISMATISTS out there who haven't heard of the new organization called Women in Numismatics (WIN), let me introduce you. WIN's purposes and goals are to encourage, promote, educate and recognize women in the numismatic community, such as collectors, coin show organizers, writers, historians, coin club officers, shop owners and managers, editors, administrators and Mint employees. WIN also supports the development of young female collectors through the ANA's Girl Scout subcommittee.

Our organization welcomes all interested women, as well as male mentors, dealers and partners, spouses and general collectors. WIN meets at five major coin shows per year, and we publish a newsletter featuring educational articles, member profiles, and interviews with industry notables.

When the idea for WIN was introduced, the initial reaction of the majority of the predominantly male community of coin dealers was bemused, light teasing, followed by firm acknowledgment and unequivocal support. "[It's] a 'no-brainer' for me," one of our male members (who is also a dealer) stated. "It makes good sense to participate."

If you haven't attended a WIN meeting or read its newsletter, you might get the uninformed idea that the organization is some kind of "Amazonian" or militant feminists' group. Nothing could be further from the truth. Our staunchest supporters are male numismatists and professional organizations, such as the PNG.

Unfortunately, there are still a few "turn-of-the-century" cohorts who seem to see women stepping forward in the field of numismatics as a threat. Perhaps they feel we are trying to upset the status quo or set ourselves apart from our male counterparts. Hopefully, these people will use their "business sense" before they offer criticisms off the top of their head, but old ways die hard for a few.

Folks, if your thoughts lie within this latter group, we welcome you to the 20th century. It's tough, but we'll all make it if we share our knowledge and business acumen, and help each other out from time to time. Join us. It's a "win-WIN" situation for all.

I'M ALL FOR women in numismatics. Anyone with a genuine interest in the hobby—whether professional or collector—is welcome to join our fraternity (or should I say sorority?). However, I just don't think the interest is there.

Characteristically, women constitute less than 10 percent of the active hobby community. Why is this? I know I'm dating myself, but in my day, boys were primed to pursue "masculine" hobbies, such as woodworking, auto mechanics, and stamp and coin collecting. Girls, on the other hand, were encouraged to take up sewing, cooking and gardening.

But, male/female roles have changed a lot in the past few decades. Today, men and women can set their sights on—and succeed in—almost any profession or avocation. Indeed, our hobby claims its share of noteworthy females, among them curators, editors, entrepreneurs and Treasury officials. I think you'll find that the ratio of prominent female hobbyists to the total number of women involved in numismatics is similar to the ratio in the male sector.

At coin shows and local shops, I often see women working behind the table or at the counter. However, when I approach them and ask about a particular item on display, I frequently am told that I must speak with the woman's husband or "boss." Some might argue that many female partners are left in the dark, but I say that if the curiosity and drive are there, these women will take it upon themselves to learn all they can about numismatics and become as informed as their spouses and/or male co-workers.

Chester West, in the January 28 issue of Numismatic News, commented on the establishment of Women in Numismatics (WIN). He urged female hobbyists not to form their own group, but to join forces with the existing core of collectors. I tend to agree. Women have earned their rightful place in this male-dominated hobby simply by demonstrating their knowledge and showing the same, genuine interest.

Computers in Numismatics

We have come a long way in numismatic record-keeping. Most of us started by keeping track of our collections in our heads or by using a pre-printed checklist. If we wanted to purchase a particular item, we wrote to the dealer in question.

My, how communications have changed! Today we talk to dealers and other collectors via cellular phone, facsimile machine or computer. Many collectors use computer software programs to record their inventory. On the heels of this communications derby is a worthy contender called "electronic mail," which allows computer-to-computer communication over ordinary phone lines. With E-mail, you can send messages or entire computer files instantly to your numismatic friends across town or across the country. If the party you want to reach isn't available, you can deposit your message in a "mail box" for later retrieval.

The computer revolution also has trickled down to local coin clubs. Many clubs produce their newsletters using word processing or publishing software. In addition, some groups even store their members' names and addresses, along with other pertinent information, in a database or computerized spreadsheet.

Under consideration is the formation of an Association Special Interest Group (SIG) within the Prodigy or CompuServe information networks. This would allow ANA clubs to conduct limited business via the computer and spread the word about the numismatic hobby.

Some time down the line, perhaps the ANA Resource Center's catalog of library holdings will be accessible by computer. News of ANA activities could be communicated directly to member clubs. The possibilities are endless.

Like it or not, time marches on. Before you know it, you will be able to pay your ANA dues, send an article to The Numismatist or use the Resource Center via computer. Maybe this will all come together in a special computer network created by and for numismatists.

Gary Lewis, LM 999

Editor's note: Those who would like to learn more about computers in numismatics are invited to attend a free seminar at the ANA's upcoming convention in Orlando entitled "Computerized Numismatic Information Network (CNIN)," by Gary Lewis and Will Jordan. The two-hour program is slated to begin at 9 a.m. on Saturday, August 15, at the Orange County Convention/Civic Center.

A Plea for a Little Coin

Since I started coin collecting more than 30 years ago in El Salvador, the tiny silver "cuartilla" (quarter-real coin) has always attracted my attention. The quartillas I found in those days came mostly from neighboring Guatemala, but also from other Central and South American countries.

Even though in later years I concentrated my collecting interests on other Latin American topics, certain quartillas acquired a permanent place in my collection. Such is the case with the 1809 quarter real of Potosí.

As far as I have been able to find out, this coin was first mentioned in 1919 by J.T. Medina in Las Monedas Coloniales Hispano-Americanas and later appeared in other references, like Bur-zio, Harris, Cayon-Castan, Grunthal-Sellschop, Asbun-Karmy and Calico. However, none of these sources shows a photo, with the exception of X. and F. Calico's Numismatica Española (7th edition, 1988), where the coin is shown, but only as a reproduction of another print.

Some time ago, the Standard Catalog of World Coins by Krause/Mishler listed the 1809 quarter real, mentioning that it should not be confused with a certain variety resulting from a misstruck 1802 quartilla. However, for a number of years the 1809 quarter real did not appear in this standard reference. Instead there was a note that "there is a variety of 1802 with base of 2 not struck up and frequently miscataloged as 1809."

When I look at the specimen in my collection, the little coin seems to ask, "Do I not exist anymore?" And the answer is, "Don't worry, the 1809 quarter real from Potosí does exist! Just look at the photographs here!"

Input Sought Regarding Formation of International Olympic Numismatic Federation

At its 96th session in Tokyo, the International Olympic Committee (IOC) announced its Centennial Commemorative Coin Programme. This is a unique undertaking for the organization, as it is not only the first time it has involved itself with a coin program, but the first time ever that the national mints of five sovereign nations (Canada, Australia, France, Austria and Greece) have joined together to participate in a commemorative coin program. The IOC will be responsible for directing and managing the program, with the aim of making more people aware of the Olympic movement and its underlying philosophies.

As a collector of sport coins and medals, I was pleased at this initiative and the new-found role numismatics will play in promoting Olympism. Spurred by the Committee's interest and initiative, a letter was submitted to the IOC president in April 1991 suggesting consideration be given to the creation of an International Olympic Numismatic Federation.

A reply several months later suggested that the IOC is not prepared to consider the establishment of a new federation for numismatics at this time, but that action would be taken to investigate the possibility of expanding an existing philatelic federation to include a section for numismatics.

Before it is concluded what type of organization would be the most effective, a fair and unbiased evaluation of the two collecting fraternities would have to be made in order to assess the contribution each can and should make toward promoting the Olympic movement. It could very well be that the combined efforts of two groups under one umbrella would be more effective than separate, stand-alone federations.

To qualify the support for the proposal, it is desirable to have comments and suggestions from world and national numismatic associations, collector societies, affiliated groups, mints, dealers, media, researchers, scholars, etc. Those who would like to contribute to this supportive process are encouraged to send their comments to me.

Coins against Drugs

I have an idea that might help the coin collecting industry and the hobby: let the ANA design a commemorative coin with an anti-drug message. The profits from the sale of this coin would go to various drug-education programs. Such a commemorative could be a very successful sales item for the U.S. Mint.

New Club Explores Chop Marks

I would like to make it known to your general membership the existence of our specialty club devoted to chop-marked coins of the world. The Chop-Mark Collectors Club was founded in 1990 with the purpose of seeking more knowledge about this facet of numismatics.

Our newsletter, though fairly basic, covers many types of coins found with chop marks. Members share information about their personal collections and, through the newsletter, attempt to identify some of the marks' origins and meanings.

Dues currently are a one-time payment of $10 to defray the cost of newsletter production and mailing. No profit is intended. Back issues of the newsletter will be sent to new members upon receipt of their dues. Interested persons may contact me for further information or a membership application.

ANA Centennial Medal Forecasted Return to Old Logo

Congratulations to the Board of Governors for correcting an earlier mistake, for "squaring up" with perpetuity by restoring the one and only, time-honored, rightful ANA logo after an undeserved exile of nearly three years.

And what bittersweet irony has played a hand in fating the 1991 centennial medal to bear both logos! Yes, bittersweet, but not altogether sad, for this episode has wrought a modern rarity, a "pearl of the first water," that being the 10kt-gold centennial medal (less than 25 of which were struck).

The bronze, silver and gold centennial issues represent the sole instance of an official ANA anniversary medal portraying both logos. The gold medal is classically emblematic of this ridiculous/sublime, two-sided occurrence, a crescendo in time, brilliantly reflecting rarity right at that quintessential moment in the history of the ANA.

Depicted on one side of the medal is the replacement eagle amid shimmering pools. On the other side, a century strides forward, carrying the book and the lamp of knowledge into the next century and, fittingly, so do we as an organization, our proper logo returned—hopefully forever—and carrying a gleaming centennial rarity as a worthy reminder.

I, for one, am proud and honored to have been moved by the centennial anniversary to order the three-medal set, this ANA icon, this treasure of happenstance that I cherished as a centerpiece months prior to the Chicago convention!

A Gentler Coin Dip?

Numismatists agree that coins should be cleaned, if at all, only when necessary to remove odd and unnatural discolorations, and that the cleaner should not etch or polish the surface of the coin. With this in mind, I have used a photographic fixer solution (ammonium or sodium thiosulfate) to remove tarnish from silver.

The image in a black-and-white photograph consists of tiny silver crystals. The purpose of fixer is to remove other silver compounds (AgCl, AgBr, AgI) without affecting the silver itself. I reasoned that photographic fixer might be useful as a coin dip that does not attack silver at all—and indeed it appears to be.

In one test, I took a Franklin half that had acquired an unsightly black stripe from contact with sulfur-containing paper, and immersed it for a few seconds in Ilford Universal Fixer, which produced no visible change. Then I rinsed it in water and detergent.

The tarnish came right off—the fixer had “lifted” it without carrying it away. The remainder of the coin showed no visible change, and, indeed, it shouldn't. In photography, microscopic silver crystals have to survive immersion in fixer for as long as 10 minutes.

I've also tried fixer on copper coins, but it works far too fast, restoring the luster of a Lincoln cent in about one second and corroding it in a minute or so. Diluting the fixer greatly with water might give better results. Also, it would probably be better to use a solution of pure sodium thiosulfate in water, with nothing else added.

Michael A. Covington, ANA 157919

Editor's note: The cleaning of coins should always be approached with caution. Before attempting to clean a valuable specimen, experiment with low-grade coins of similar composition.

Group Investigating Garza Mint

Any readers having information about the Garza Mint, authorized in 1818 by the Spanish government to provide circulating coinage in San Antonio, please contact Colonel Bill Murray, 7400 Crestway, #1423, San Antonio, TX 78239. The First Wednesday Night Study Group of San Antonio is researching the establishment and operation of the Garza Mint; as yet, little information has been uncovered.

Any and all information is welcome, however miniscule you may consider it. The Group thanks you in advance.

Bowers Researching Silver and Trade Dollars

In connection with my forthcoming book, Silver Dollars and Trade Dollars of the United States: A Complete En- cyclopedia, I would like to correspond with anyone on the subjects below. A credit line will be given in the book for any help provided.

1) I will be printing pedigree chains of specific specimens of the following coins, and desire to hear from anyone who has bought or sold any of these pieces. If available, I would like the names of the buyer and the seller, and the price. I recognize that in the dealer and collector communities confidentiality must often be maintained, and in the book a comment such as "now in an Eastern Collection" can certainly be used in place of "now in the John Doe Collection." The specific coins are: 1801-03 silver dollar restrikes, 1804 dollar, 1870-S dollar, 1922 high-relief Peace dollar, 1884 Trade dollar and 1885 Trade dollar.

2) With regard to 1836-39 Gobrecht silver dollars, I would like to correspond with anyone having examples of same, and who can provide as much as possible of the following information:

a) Die alignment using the Breen and Julian methods (if you are not familiar with these, I can describe these in a letter if you contact me).

b) Weight (in grains or grams; your local druggist should be able to help in this regard).

c) A detailed description of any minute die cracks, often seen on the reverse around the peripheral lettering.

d) On the obverse of 1838 and 1839 issues, any evidence, however slight, of flaws in the denticles, repunched stars, etc.

3) General information concerning the release of Treasury-held silver dollars in the 1950s and, particularly, 1962-63. I desire to hear from anyone

EMERGING GIANTS

"Key" coins are once again becoming the focus of Numismatics! The population reports issued by PCGS and NGC have made informed individuals acutely aware of how desirable and undervalued many truly rare and low population coins are when compared to most highly touted "generic" coins. When working with coins of this nature, I believe that it is essential to enlist the help of a specialist. In this way, you can benefit from experience while avoiding the pitfalls.

I have been dealing exclusively in rare date gold coins for over a dozen years. My reputation and knowledge in this field is unsurpassed. I would be pleased to work with you to build your "World Class" collection or investment portfolio.

Please call me today, so we can discuss your needs.

who has firsthand knowledge of quantities of Liberty Seated dollars dated 1859-O, 1860-O, 1871 and 1872. (Information concerning specific quantities released has been very elusive. For example, I do not know whether any 1872 dollars were released beyond just a few pieces.) In the area of Morgan silver dollars, I would be pleased to correspond with anyone who has firsthand knowledge of bags or quantities of rare issues.

4) In the field of Trade dollars, I particularly need information concerning 1875 and 1876 Trade dollars of the Philadelphia, Carson City and San Francisco Mints, with information on Philadelphia coins pertaining to proofs as well as business strikes. Specifically, I would like to hear from anyone who can identify specimens in any grade with regard to the different types.

There are two obverse "types." Type I, used on all 1873 and 1874 coins, and on some of 1875 and 1876, has the ends of the ribbon (on which the word LIBERTY is imprinted) pointing downward diagonally to the left. The Type II obverse, used on some 1875 and 1876 coins, and all coins dated 1877-85, has the ribbon ends pointing directly down. The Type I reverse has a prominent berry on the branch under the eagle's claw, while the Type II reverse lacks the berry. The Type I reverse was used in 1873 and 1874, some issues of 1875 and 1876, and all after that date. (When writing, a notation such as "1876-S, obverse Type I, reverse Type II, approximate grade EF-40" is just what I am looking for.)

5) Further on the subject of Trade dollars, I would like to correspond with anyone who owns an 1876-S with doubled-die obverse (particularly evident on Miss Liberty's chin; described in the Fivaz-Stanton book as $1-013). I also would like to hear from anyone who has an 1876-CC Trade dollar with doubled-die reverse, characterized by a thin, extra line between the regular horizontal branch on the reverse and the letters IN of FINE.

Thank you for your help! Write to me in care of Research Project, Box 1224, Wolfeboro, NH 03894.

Kaskawulsh Glacier Shown on Yukon Quarter

The fifth coin in the "Canada 125 Coin Program," dedicated to the Yukon, features the Kaskawulsh Glacier in Kluane National Park. The coin's reverse design, submitted by Yukon artist Libby Dulac, was selected through a nationwide competition.

Each month in 1992 a new quarter dollar will be released as part of a program celebrating the 125th anniversary of Canada's confederation. Each coin in the series depicts a familiar image from one of Canada's provinces or territories. A $1 dollar coin will complete the series.

The sterling silver Yukon 25-cent piece, like the first four quarters in the series, sells for $9.95. The proof $1, struck in bronze-plated nickel, will be available after its introduction on July 1 for $19.95. A complete set of 13 coins will be available later in the year for $129.45.

ORLANDO Convention Update

Both the International and the United States Olympic Committees will be on hand to promote their coinage programs. "Watch for some exciting events," says Convention Director Ruthann Brettell.

The American Numismatic Society (ANS) will be honored for its 75 years of continuous ANA membership at the Membership Reception on Friday, August 14.

By popular demand, the Educational Services Department has extended the Numismatic Theatre through the last day of the convention. On Sunday, August 16, four presentations are scheduled, beginning at 12 noon.

The official convention medal, struck in silver and bronze by Silver-Towne, pictures an adaptation of a vignette from an early Florida $4 bank note. The same design will appear on the postal cancellation for the convention.

Back again is the ANA's exclusive "World Mints Passport," introduced at the 1990 convention in Seattle. Sixteen world mints will participate, including three newcomers: the Isle of Man, Gibraltar and the Republic of San Marino.

Many great rarities from Greek Sicily will be featured in the Numismatic Fine Arts 1992 ANA sale of ancient coins. Other highlights include Roman and Byzantine gold.

Stanton on Friday, August 14, from 9 to 11 a.m. That evening at 7 o'clock, ANA President Edward C. Rochette will moderate the Educational Forum, which will consider the "Past, Present and Future Aspects of the Hobby."

Sunshine States News

By Roger Bryan, FUN President
1992 ANA Convention General Chairman

It's been 18 long years since the American Numismatic Association held a convention in the State of Florida. The long wait is finally over—circle your calendars for August 12-16.

The ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention the "AmericANA Coin Show: A World's Fair of Money," will be held at the Orange County Convention/Civic Center in Orlando.

FUN is the host club for the convention, and as General Chairman, I want to invite every member of FUN to come out and help the ANA celebrate its 101st Anniversary Convention. We have planned the entire convention with the family in mind.

The FUN staff has joined hands with the ANA and we've really assembled some FUN-filled packages for your enjoyment: Wednesday, August 12, 1992, join the tour to Winter Park, a wonderful little town with an influx of "Southern Charm." Spend the day viewing the many crystal-clear, spring-fed lakes linked by Venetian canals. Some of the most magnificent lakefront homes in the area are located here. You will have an opportunity to "shop" famous Park Avenue, a unique neighborhood noted for its many gift and specialty stores.

Wednesday evening, join me at Church Street Station for a gala wine tasting and dinner. Seating will be limited to 25 persons. After the wine tasting, you will indulge in some fine food especially prepared for our convention-goers.

Thursday, August 13, 1992, tour the famous "Kennedy Space Center." All major attractions will be included in the package, and the tour will require most of the day. The entire family will have the time of their lives. No one will want to miss this tour.

Friday, August 14, 1992, will be a very busy day. First, the "Friendship Luncheon" will be held downtown at Church Street Station. There will be many surprises in the "goodie" bags.

Second, the ANA's Young Numismatist's tour will visit Universal Studios. King Kong had better watch his step.

Saturday, August 15, 1992, the ANA will hold the convention banquet at the Peabody Hotel, across the street from the convention center. There are some surprises planned for the evening, and Bud Tobin, Banquet Chairman, has selected a mouth-watering menu with a special dessert.

During the convention, the ANA will hold its second annual "World Series of Numismatics." This is a "FUN" event and can be shared by the family.

Mints from around the world will be present. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing will mount a billion-dollar display including the Spider Press. Have you seen $10,000 notes? $100,000 notes? Million-dollar Treasury notes? This is the exhibit for you to see.

As this is an Olympic year, the convention will feature special recognition of American Olympians with visits by many of this country's finest athletes.

Want to learn more about numismatics? More than 60 hours of outstanding educational forums and quality speakers will present interesting programs.

We would like to see every state in the union represented at the convention. For those of you who intend to fly, special reduced fares on Delta Airlines and special rates with Budget-Rent-A-Car will be in effect. Simply mention you're attending the ANA 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando.

Registration cards and informational pamphlets are available from the ANA Convention Department, telephone 719-632-2646 or write ANA, 818 N. Cascade Ave., Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279.

The convention headquarters will be the Peabody Hotel. Special rates will also be available from the Clarion Plaza Hotel and the Quality Inn Plaza. Make reservations through the ANA Housing Bureau, 7208 Sand Lake #300, Orlando, FL 32819, telephone 800/258-7666, fax 407/363-5817.

The "City Beautiful" awaits you. Oh, don't forget about the "other" attraction—DisneyWorld.

ANA Awards Two Summer Internships

The American Numismatic Association has awarded two internships for study at its Colorado Springs headquarters this summer. Selected were Michael R. Florer of Lincoln, Nebraska, and J. David Thacker Jr. of Pulaski, Virginia. Both will attend a week-long Summer Conference course of their choice during their eight weeks at ANA. During the remaining seven weeks, they will work in the ANA Resource Center and Museum.

Florer is a master's degree candidate in the University of Nebraska's Interdisciplinary Museum Studies Program, where he majors in museum studies, with a minor in history. Florer has collected numismatic and philatelic material for almost 15 years, and is an active member of the Society of Ration Token Collectors, serving as editor of the club's quarterly journal, The Ration Board. His other interests include genealogy, history and golf.

Like many other collectors, Thacker's first experience in the hobby involved filling albums of cents, nickels and quarters. He then took an interest in error coins, through which he developed an in-depth knowledge of the minting process. After attending local, regional and national shows, he also became interested in numismatic reference books. This autumn, Thacker plans to continue his studies at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University in Daytona, Florida.

Colorado Springs Headquarters Celebrates 25 Years of Service

A little more than 10 years after its founding, the American Numismatic Association gained national prominence on May 9, 1912, when it was granted a Federal Charter by President William H. Taft. An amendment to make the Charter permanent was introduced in 1962 by Congressman Wilbur Mills and Senator John L. McClellan, both of Arkansas; it was passed by Congress and signed by President John F. Kennedy on April

A stately Victorian, typical of the homes on Colorado Springs' Cascade Avenue, was leveled in 1966 to make room for the ANA's new home and headquarters.

During these decades of growth, the ANA had no home of its own, its offices being scattered about the country. Realizing that a centrally located facility would improve membership services and make possible the establishment of a numismatic museum and permanent library, the ANA Board of Governors set up a "home and headquarters" building fund on April 29, 1961.

Sixteen cities cast their bids for the location of the new headquarters. Finally, Colorado Springs, Colorado, was selected, and ground-breaking ceremonies were held on September 6, 1966. On December 20, 1966, the building fund goal of $250,000 was reached, thanks to a team of benefactors, patrons, numismatic clubs, and 3,800 other contributors. Debt free, the new home and headquarters of the American Numismatic Association was dedicated and officially opened in Colorado Springs on June 10, 1967.

By 1980, membership approached 35,000 and the headquarters staff numbered close to 50 people. Soon the facility could not accommodate the growing staff, library and museum, and the Association once again called upon the support and generosity of its members to help fund the renovation and enlargement of the building. Exactly 15 years to the day of the original structure's dedication, the newly expanded headquarters was dedicated in June 1982.

Designed to accommodate future expansion, the new building (top) was dedicated on June 10, 1967. In June 1982, the ANA officially opened its expanded facility, which featured a two-story addition on the west side of the building.

ANA President Edward C. Rochette witnessed both constructions, having been editor of The Numismatist in 1967 and executive vice president in 1982. "The creation of a central home and headquarters led to greatly expanded services—from a library that has quadrupled in size to standardized grading and terminology. We have taken advantage of our location on the campus of The Colorado College to offer a very popular annual summer conference," he explains. "It has been exciting to have participated in the ANA's transition from a small hobby organization to one of professional and educational pursuit."

Twenty-six years after the historic groundbreaking, ANA headquarters continues to serve the membership and the community. Aside from the dedication of the Hall of Nations gallery for the visually impaired in July 1989, the addition of a museum store in mid 1987, and reorganization of office space following the 1990 sale of the ANA Certification Service, little has changed since the building's renovation in 1982.

However, 10 years of activity and traffic had taken its toll on the carpeting. In a massive, well-coordinated effort, the entire facility (except for the lower museum galleries) was recarpeted in April and May of this year. The undertaking necessitated the removal and reshelving of thousands of books in the library and the relocation of offices to temporary quarters in the basement. Despite the upheaval, business continued more or less as usual, with minimal inconvenience to the membership.

This summer is the perfect time to visit beautiful Colorado Springs and the home and headquarters of your national organization. The museum and library are open Monday through Saturday, 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., until Labor Day.

Among the high-grade type coins that have been consigned to the Heritage anniversary convention sale are an 1895 Barber half dollar graded Proof-68 by NGC and a 1937 Buffalo nickel graded Proof-69 by PCGS. Rare silver includes a PCGS-graded 1893-S Morgan dollar in MS-65. Pattern silver is highlighted by a Proof-64 1839 Gobrecht dollar (Judd-108), the only such pattern to be certified in any grade.

Gold offerings include two $1 gold pieces graded by PCGS—an 1857 (MS-68) and an 1880 (MS-67). Of the proof gold coins set to cross the block are an 1887 $1 graded Proof-66 by PCGS; an 1876 $3, Proof-63 (NGC); and an 1888 $3, Proof-65 (PCGS). Featured rare gold consignments are an 1852 quarter eagle listed as MS-65 and a 1907 high-relief Saint-Gaudens $20 graded by NGC as MS-65.

Of interest in the lots of early U.S. gold are examples of Small and Heraldic type 1795 eagles and half eagles. Among the offerings in pattern gold are a gilt pair of 1880 Stellas, representing the Coiled and Flowing Hair types.

Auction lots in the Heritage sale will be available for viewing at the Orange County Convention/Civic Center beginning Monday, August 10. The four-session ANA anniversary convention auction will be conducted at the Peabody Hotel. Consult the "Tentative Schedule of Events" in this issue for auction lot viewing hours and auction session times. Numismatic Fine Arts' "Auction XXIX," the 1992 ANA sale of ancient coins, will be held at the Clarion Plaza Hotel in Orlando at 7 p.m. on Thursday, August 13. Featured in the sale will be many great rarities from Greek Sicily — products of some of the world's historically most talented die engravers—and Roman and Byzantine gold mirroring the most exciting emperors and their accomplishments.

Last year, Numismatic Fine Arts (NFA) introduced an official ancient coin auction to the ANA agenda. The largest selection of ancient coins ever exhibited at an ANA convention can be viewed in Room 10C of the convention center or at NFA's tables (#916 and #1015), where the firm's staff looks forward to acquainting convention visitors with the exciting field of ancient coins. ANA Programs Designed for the Young Collector

The American Numismatic Association has established a number of programs to introduce more young collectors to numismatics and to encourage them to become active members of the hobby community. The programs are overseen by the Association's YN Committee, headed by ANA Vice President David Ganz.

More than 20 young numismatists from around the country received scholarships to the ANA's Summer Conference this year. The scholarships are sponsored by the Association and ANA-member clubs.

Several events exclusively for YNs will be held in conjunction with the AmeriANA Coin Show: A World's Fair of Money, the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention, scheduled for August 12-16 in Orlando, Florida. Included on the convention schedule are a YN Awards Breakfast, underwritten again this year by the Professional Numismatists Guild, and two special auctions—a lively event at the convention and a separate mail-bid sale—using "auction money" earned during the past year for numismatic activities. A Boy Scout Coin Collecting Merit Badge Clinic also is planned during the show. For dates and times of YN events, see "Tentative Schedule of Events" in this issue.

The recently established Girl Scout Subcommittee is developing a badge program related specifically to numismatics. The Subcommittee also encourages individual members and clubs to work with girls through the Girl Scouts' existing badge programs for "Collecting."

Austrian National Bank Pledges Support of 1992 Membership Promotion

On a recent visit to the ANA's Colorado Springs headquarters, Willibald Kranister, executive director of the Austrian National Bank, presented ANA Membership Director Kim Dixon with a new Austrian Olympic commemorative coin, intended as a prize in the Association's 1992 membership recruiting drive scheduled for later this year. The Austrian Mint supplied all the prizes for the successful 1991 contest, which included an all-expenses-paid trip for two to Austria. •

The R & B Connection

Just as rhythm-and-blues artists left their mark on music in the years immediately following World War II, rhythm-and-blues music has added a unique dimension to numismatics, says Frank Van Valen, associate director of auctions for Bowers and Merena. "In my 30 years of coin collecting," Van Valen says, "nearly every collector I have met has had another hobby. Like so many of these other coin collectors, I, too, have another hobby. I collect R & B vocal group recordings.

"Here is a quick numismatic quiz: what do a 1909-S VDB Lincoln cent, an 1874-CC Seated Liberty dime, a 1932-D Washington quarter, a 1796 Draped Bust half dollar and an 1893-S Morgan dollar have in common with a rhythm-and-blues vocal group? Each piece is, of course, the key coin in its series. An R & B vocal group, composed of Rudy West, Bernie West, Maryland Pierce, Ripley Ingram and Numismatically named groups like the Five Crowns recorded in the early days of rock-and-roll.

Dickie Smith recorded under the name 'The Five Keys.' "

In this manner, Van Valen links the rhythm-and-blues and early rock-and-roll vocal groups from 1946-61 (known as the "Golden Age" of R & B groups) to numismatic terminology. For instance, an early group that Van Valen asserts set the standard for all future R & B vocal groups recorded on the HUB record label. "To a numismatist," Van Valen writes, "a hub is an important part of the minting process. To an R & B fan, 'HUB' represents the rare 78 rpm recordings by the Ravens that mark the early beginnings of rock 'n roll."

In 1947 the Ravens left HUB records and began recording on the National label. "R & B lovers collect 'Nationals' as avidly as paper money fanciers, thanks to the Ravens," notes Van Valen. He mentions that at one time the Ravens also featured a vocalist by the name of Dave Bowers.

Although such coincidences do not have true numismatic significance, Van Valen enjoys the correlation between his two hobbies. Many collectors probably have noted that numismatic terminology often is employed in song lyrics and titles. Van Valen has cataloged many of these while listening to recordings from his favorite groups.

Songs such as "Three Coins in the Fountain," "Money Honey," "Your Cash Ain't Nothing but Trash," "Greenbacks," "Ain't Got the Money," "A Penny for Your Thoughts," and the ever-popular "Pennies from Heaven" sometimes were recorded by groups with numismatically significant names. The C-Notes, Coins, Four Pennies, Five Bills, Five Crowns, Five Dollars, Five Pennies, Five Shillings and Fortunes are just as familiar to R & B fans as corresponding terms are to numismatists. And, besides the HUB and National labels, these groups can be found on Cash Records, Fortune Records, Million Dollar Records and Money Records.

Van Valen notes that a wealth of rock-and-roll songs with numismatic connections probably exist and says that perhaps someday he will research that topic. "But right now, I'm going to read the latest issue of The Numismatist while the sweet sounds of the R & B era make those lyrical numismatic connections on my stereo!"

James Madison and Bill of Rights Focus of Design Competition

The American Numismatic Association has been formally invited to participate in designing official U.S. commemorative coins. The ANA, in conjunction with the James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation, is announcing a nationwide competition to design the 1993 James Madison-Bicentennial of the Bill of Rights gold and silver commemorative coins. All members of the ANA are encouraged to participate.

The act that created the three-coin set authorizes the U.S. Mint to produce and issue commemorative coins to celebrate James Madison, generally considered to be the "Father of the U.S. Constitution," and the 200th anniversary of the Bill of Rights. The design for the gold $5 piece and silver half dollar should be emblematic of the Bill of Rights. The $1 silver coin should represent James Madison on the obverse and Madison's Virginia home, Montpelier, on the reverse. A prize of $2,500 will be awarded for each of the six designs selected.

Designers will be limited to one design for each side of each coin, or a total of six designs. A seven-member panel, including an ANA representative and other numismatic and artistic experts, will judge the design on the basis of theme, symbolism, artistic merit and marketability. Members of the panel and their families are not eligible. The top 10 designs for each coin selected by the panel will be submitted to Treasury officials. The Sec-

James Madison, generally acknowledged as the "Father of the U.S. Constitution," is depicted in a bas-relief, life-size alabaster bust carved by sculptor Giuseppe Ceracchi. The James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation and the ANA have announced a nationwide competition to design three commemorative coins honoring Madison and the Bill of Rights.

Krause Publications Celebrates 40th Anniversary

The first issue of Numismatic News, conceived as an inexpensive, collector marketplace-style newspaper, was produced on the Krause family dining-room table in Iola, Wisconsin, in 1952. In the ensuing 40 years, Chester Krause learned that banks generally require more than "vision" as collateral and "you do it yourself or it doesn't get done."

Krause's vision has grown into a corporation employing 320 persons, and utilizing 82,000 square feet of manufacturing facilities. It produces 27 periodicals and more than 50 book titles in seven different fields. The persistence that characterizes Krause's do-it-yourself attitude has shepherded his company through the peaks and valleys of publishing and numismatics to emerge as a leading force in the hobby.

Krause Publications' most impressive growth occurred during the 1980s. Following a bold move into the computer age in 1964, the company constantly updated its computers and typesetting equipment, acquiring a competitive edge over smaller companies unable to meet the financial demands of converting to high-technology equipment. As Krause absorbed many of these small firms and publishing companies, its diversification helped to stabilize the corporation's cash flow. Five building expansions helped meet the demands of different product lines and allowed for continued growth.

A 1988 incorporation resulted in an Employee Stock Ownership Plan so successful that employees now own more than 50 percent of the company. Instituted to help strengthen Krause Publications' permanence in Iola, a small town far from traditional publishing centers, the plan has increased stock values 133 percent since the partnership was formulated.

ANA President Views Roosevelt Coin Collection

Staff at the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Library and Museum in Hyde Park, New York, brought out coins that are not displayed for public viewing in honor of the recent visit of ANA President Edward C. Rochette and the British Royal Mint's press representative in North America, Michael Sedgwick. The coins were part of Roosevelt's private collection.

Rochette identified a selection of U.S. commemoratives, but Sedgwick was most interested in a 1937 specimen set of George VI gold proofs. The set was the first struck by the Royal Mint during George's reign. •

Collectors Take Stock!

Stocks and bonds are anything but common. In fact, many collectors prefer these colorful, historic certificates to coins or paper money.

by Fred Schwan
LM 1584

STOCKS AND BONDS are the collectibles of choice for a relatively small, but avid—and growing—number of hobbyists in North America and around the world. These historic and often beautiful certificates offer something for almost every collector.

The collecting of this material is more advanced in Europe than in the United States. There it is called “scripophily,” a term that emerged from a 1981 contest conducted in England to find a name for the hobby. European collectors also are more likely to refer to stocks as “shares” or “share certificates.”

The similarity between antique stocks and bonds and paper money is obvious. Both represent wealth and were produced by security printers. Indeed, many of the vignettes found on paper money are duplicated on stock certificates.

Bank certificates hold special interest for collectors of coins and especially paper money.

STRICT COIN COLLECTORS may think that certificates have little relevance to numismatics, but the connection is stronger than they might expect.

Strict coin collectors may think that certificates have little relevance to numismatics, but the connection is stronger than they might expect. Stocks issued by gold and silver mining companies have been popular with investors and now hold the same fascination for scripophilists; coin collectors might well find them of interest, too.

A stock certificate represents part ownership in corporate capital. The value of each share is determined in the free market, and the fortunes of the share owners rise and fall with those of the company. Both "common" and "preferred" shares may be sold. Each share of common stock confers full voting and dividend rights. Preferred stock gives its holders a preferential claim to dividends; for example, no dividends may be declared on the common stock unless dividends of a stipulated amount per year have been declared on the preferred shares. Companies may issue certificates of each type, sometimes with different denominations and designs.

Bonds, on the other hand, represent loans made to the issuer by the buyer, with all interest paid by the issuer. The prices of bonds can fluctuate, but if the company involved is stable, bonds can be a secure investment. Bonds, too, come in varieties, the most common being "registered," which can be paid only to the purchaser of record. "Bearer" bonds, however, can be redeemed by whomever holds them.

Bonds are frequently issued by governments as well as companies. Today, the United States government sells Series EE bonds, direct descendants of the Series E war bonds offered during World War II.

Just like coin collectors, scripophiles frequently specialize in a particular area. Mining certificates, along with stock issued by oil and gas companies, are favorite subjects. But, without a doubt, the most popular topic is railroads. Thousands of different certificates are available for railroad companies, and most feature beautiful, engraved vignettes of locomotives or trains.

Automobile stocks also are very popular with collectors, as are certificates issued by companies that operated in American territories. Bank certificates hold special interest for collectors of coins and especially paper money. Many stock certificates are available for banks that also issued National Bank notes; on the other hand, notes may not be known for some stock-issuing banks.

A number of collectors seek stock certificates issued by companies with interesting names. This type of collection offers marvelous diversity; for example, certificates were issued by the Four Aces Mines, Holman Locomotive and Speeding Truck Company, Moonlight Mining Company, and Belfast & Moosehead Lake Rail Road Company. The possibilities are endless!

The most common and popular stock certificates were printed from intaglio, or engraved, plates by some of the largest bank note companies. Those produced by the American Bank Note Company, Thomas De La Rue and Security Bank Note Company are readily recognized by collectors simply because of their style and intricate vignettes. Some collectors specialize in the products of these major companies, while others prefer the work of the smaller, more obscure printing firms.

By far the most popular stocks and bonds are those issued by railroad companies (above and opposite). Many feature beautifully engraved renderings of locomotives and trains, as well as allegorical vignettes.

By nature and necessity, the dimensions of stocks and bonds are considerably larger than that of paper money (and certainly coins), and as such these certificates offer exceptional opportunities for artistic expression. Gene Hessler and others have keyed in on this aspect by studying the various vignettes in detail.

In many cases, certificates were produced using multicolor lithography, a method perfected in Europe, where spectacularly beautiful certificates have been produced. In general, the companies in the United States that produced lithographed certificates did not exploit the possibilities of that technology.

Finally, some certificates are merely blank forms that are printed by the offset (or occasionally intaglio) method. The pertinent information often is written in by hand. While they may lack artistic quality, they frequently are rich in historic importance.

When a certificate is redeemed, it is canceled, usually by punching holes through the signature or other important design elements. Canceled certificates generally are stored for a while then destroyed. From these canceled samples, a relatively small portion find their way into collectors's hands. (Not surprisingly, the vast majority of certificates in collections are canceled.)

If a company goes out of business, its stock certificates become worthless and prime candidates for collections. This situation was prevalent in the 19th century, particularly with mining companies, but also happens frequently today (Pan American Airlines stock, for example). In some cases, certificates were issued for companies that never existed—an effort to bilk unwary investors.

Many certificates are available that were never issued. In most cases, these stocks were produced for shareholders, but were not sold. However, sometimes they are the product of companies that never sold shares, even though the certificates were prepared.

In all instances, collectors prefer stocks that have been issued, which means they readily accept canceled certificates. Such cancellations would disqualify a piece of paper money (or coin) from a collection (except for the greatest rarities), but are accepted and almost ignored by share and bond collectors.

There is a growing trend among scripophiles to purchase shares in a company for the primary purpose of obtaining the certificate and the accompanying annual reports. This is particularly true for the United States Bank Note Corporation (and, in the past other bank note companies) because, among other things, the annual reports often were lavish productions worthy of being collected in their own right.

Occasionally, dealers capitalize on the popularity of a particular certificate by purchasing multiple shares and then reselling them for more than the value of the shares! The best examples of this unusual situation are stocks issued by Playboy Enterprises and Disney Studios.

It also is possible to find antique and apparently obsolete certificates that still have a market value. Whether a valid certificate can be sold as a secuity by the collector who finds it depends on how the certificate was issued and the endorsements thereon.

Antique stocks bearing actual signatures of famous people are very popular and can bring high prices. At a January 1992 auction, an 1865 New York and Harlem Railroad certificate signed by Cornelius "Commodore" Vanderbilt and William H. Vanderbilt sold for $12,000, and an 1881 Standard Oil (of Ohio) certificate signed by John D. Rockefeller as company president sold for more than $9,000. Other signed certificates in the sale brought around $1,000 each. It is distinctly possible to study and collect certificates by signature varieties and combinations in the same way as paper money.

The "king" of collecting signatures on antique stock certificates is Scott Winslow, who is both a hobbyist and a full-time dealer. Winslow virtually beams at the mention of these certificates. As you might expect, he is a storehouse of information on American history. (He is also president of the Bond and Share Society.)

The prices paid for some certificates demonstrate that the hobby has serious devotees, but these figures are hardly typical. Thousands of attractive certificates can be purchased for less than $2 each! Although your chances of finding a local shop that specializes in antique stocks and bonds are slim, there are a fair number of mail-order dealers. The classified ads in the major numismatic publications can provide you with a place to start.

It is possible, although not easy, to find certificates and bonds at shows. Many dealers who carry paper money have at least a few stocks and bonds. Those who specialize in this area sometimes attend regional and even local shows. A large assortment of stocks and bonds can be found at the annual International Paper Money Show in Memphis, Tennessee.

One yearly event that is devoted exclusively to antique stocks and bonds takes place in none other than Strasburg, Pennsylvania! The very mention of this small resort town in the eastern part of the state excites the avid scrippophilist. Since 1988, Strasburg has hosted the only show of its kind in the United States. The bourse is small by "big coin show" standards (approximately 30 tables), but big in every other way.

The collectors and dealers in attendance pursue their hobby with a passion. The entire show is more like a club get-together. Dealers (and some collectors, too) come from all over North America and Europe to participate in the activities.

The show was the brainchild of Diana and John Herzog of R.M.

Happy 200th Birthday, New York Stock Exchange!

Under the branches of an old buttonwood tree on New York City's Wall Street, a group of 24 merchants and brokers gathered to discuss a financial arrangement. They decided to charge a commission for acting as agents and to give preference to each other in the purchase and sale of securities. This inauspicious occasion, which occurred in May 1792, is thought to be the birth of the New York Stock Exchange. (The group continued to operate under the buttonwood tree except during inclement weather, when members adjourned to a nearby coffee shop.)

The initial exchange came about in response to the debt created by the Revolutionary War. Congress authorized an issue of $80,000,000 in bonds to repay the war debt, but the public was slow to invest in these and other securities unless they could be resold easily. The exchange was formed to help solve this dilemma.

As the number of involved brokers grew, a group of them decided to create a formal organization. The group adopted a simple constitution comparable to that of a small-town social club and called themselves the New York Stock and Exchange board. It agreed to accept the group's present brokers as members, but each new member had to be sponsored by an existing member and then approved by the entire board.

Today, the market is a highly efficient operation located only a few blocks from the site of the old buttonwood tree. It now consists of 1,375 individuals or firms holding seats that sell for more than a half million dollars each. The Exchange is estimated to have an impact on at least half of the population of the United States.

The Board Room of the New York Stock Exchange is bustling in this 1881 illustration. When this view was drawn, the Exchange building on Broad Street, opened in 1865, had just been enlarged. Membership had grown from 400 in 1865 to 1,100, and the price of a seat rose from $3,000 to $34,000.

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES CONSTITUTE a distinctly different area for collectors. In the United States, many of these are very rare, but at least a few are available.

Smythe and Company. These two are real leaders in the field of stocks and bonds. Diana has served as general secretary of the Bond and Share Society for many years; John is an avid collector with eclectic tastes.

John Herzog has brought his considerable energy, creativity and organizational ability to bear on another brainchild—the Museum of American Financial History in New York. This is a nonprofit organization whose function is to promote the collection and study of stocks, bonds and other financial documents, and educate the public about our financial history and capital markets. Some of his fund-raising activities for the museum would make many politicians envious and are certainly unprecedented in numismatics.

The organization publishes the only magazine aimed directly at stock and bond collectors, a quarterly entitled Friends of Financial History. The museum has exhibited material at numismatic events in the past, but in May of this year in New York City, it debuted its first permanent exhibits: a visual display of the history of engraving in the United States as shown by stocks and bonds (1823-1983) and a tribute to the 200th anniversary of the New York Stock Exchange (see sidebar). Readers can contact the Museum at 26 Broadway, Room 200, New York, NY 10004-1763.

Government securities constitute a distinctly different area for collectors. In the United States, many of these securities are very rare, but at least a few are available. In general, canceled government bonds are not as readily obtainable as stock certificates, which is why the bonds are so much more scarce. Fortunately for collectors, a small hoard of canceled World War II war bonds surfaced a few years ago, giving collectors a chance to own these interesting and historic documents (see the February 1992 issue of The Numismatist, "Investing in Victory," p. 198).

However, securities issued by now-defunct governments are not nearly as difficult to obtain. Nazi Germany and pre-revolution China are two examples. ANA Chief Judge Joseph Boling avidly collects World War II Japanese war bonds. Basically, he got started in this specialized area because he collects Japanese coins and paper money. Even though Boling has been building this collection for years, and his is probably the finest of its kind in the world, he has done so at a modest cost.

Unfortunately, there are not too many books specifically about antique stocks and bonds. One reference is Scripophily by Keith Hollander, a book for beginners that describes the many aspects of collecting. William G. Anderson's The Price of Liberty covers the bonds used to finance the American Revolution.

"The International Bond and Share Society Guide for Collectors" is a colorful pamphlet for novices with much useful information. Copies can be obtained free by writing to the Society, Box 6033, Nashua, NH 03063. (Some stamps to cover postage would probably be appreciated.)

Publication of a "catalog" of stocks and bonds, in the sense that most North American collectors expect, is unlikely. The tremendous number of companies that have issued stocks and bonds and the multiplicity of their issues over just the past 100 years makes compilation of such a catalog impractical, if not impossible.

In spite of this, collectors seem to like "list references." Andrew C. Hall Sr. published a book that lists about 5,000 of the most commonly encountered stocks. A similar volume exists for French stock certificates (3000 Titres Français Répertoires et Cotes by Guy Cifre), and Anne-Marie Hendy compiled a book for the most popular specialty, American Railroad Stock Certificates. However, the lists most often used are sales and auction catalogs. Indeed, at least two dealers have issued fixed price lists that include most of the features of a general catalog.

Two fairly detailed and popular books covering specific areas are An Illustrated History of United States Loans, 1776-1896 by Gene Hessler and Confederate and Southern States Currency by Grover C. Criswell. Both are interesting and useful. Serious collectors tend to use books that are not intended for collectors at all. Favorite references are Standard & Poor's Manual of the Railroads of the United States and similar titles that list the status of the stocks issued by a company for a particular year.

As mentioned, the only periodical devoted to stocks and bonds is Friends of Financial History. Numismatic periodicals and tabloids, particularly Bank Note Reporter, occasionally contain relevant stories, and their classified advertising sections definitely include dealers in stocks and bonds. (For a sample copy of Bank Note Reporter, write to Krause Publications, 700 East State Street, Iola, WI 54990. Be sure to mention The Numismatist.)

The world of stock and bond collecting offers numismatists many opportunities to expand into a field that is varied and affordable. They can have fun while collecting historic documents that have not been exploited by hoards of other collectors—yet.

Fred Schwan is a full-time collector and researcher of World War II paper money. The author of several books and hundreds of articles in this area, he is a member of the International Bank Note Society and the Numismatic Literary Guild. Schwan is particularly interested in aviation stocks and welcomes correspondence from collectors of similar inclination. Readers can write to him at 132 E. Second St., Port Clinton, OH 43452-1115.

Precious Metal Coin Art Cards

While looking through some early card catalogs, we noticed that the turn-of-the-century cigarette cards pictured a variety of topics and designs. Not only did we find cards depicting American Indians, but also U.S. and world coins.

This sparked the idea of creating Precious Metals Cards™, which would combine two important facets in the history of our country—Native Americans and United States' coins. Both are an integral part of the very foundations of this nation.

We approached the Board of Governors of the American Numismatic Association (ANA)—the world's largest educational, nonprofit organization for collectors of coins, tokens, medals and paper money—and asked permission to incorporate images of some of the extraordinary coins in the ANA's World Money Museum, providing collectors a glimpse of these great rarities.

In 1991, the ANA Board authorized Powell Associates to produce these Precious Metal Images. In addition, the firm was granted permission to include other not-so-rare coins that nevertheless have a fascinating story to tell those who have not yet caught the coin-collecting "bug."

Each Precious Metal Image—whether produced in gold, silver or platinum—bears a spectacular, full-color photograph that is transferred to the metal core via a plastic lamination process pioneered by Mitsubishi Materials Corporation. These unique Precious Metal Coin Art Cards blend card collecting with coin collecting, depicting objects of beauty not often available for public viewing.

Some Thoughts on the Rare Coin Market

The author considers investors, collectors and the theories of Thorstein Veblen, a 20th-century economist and sociologist whose prophetic writings profoundly influenced world economics.

by Arthur Cawmer

Born in July 1857 on a frontier farm in Wisconsin, the fourth son of a Norwegian immigrant carpenter, sociologist and economist Thorstein Bunde Veblen was regarded by his peers as "an outlander, an iconoclast [and] more than a little mad."

THE RARE COIN market has gone through a number of very dramatic changes in the last 10 years. We have seen a shift from a collector-based to an investor-based market and the movement of investors into and out of rare coins. We have witnessed the development of third-party grading and computer grading. The rare coin investment fund is a matter of fact (although not particularly active at this moment), and the multimillion-dollar numismatic auction is commonplace. What has brought us to this point? What lies ahead for those who purchase numismatic items?

As many have suspected for a number of years, numismatics has become a business, but the hobby community has clung to the concept of coins and coin collecting as an avocation. At the same time, dealers promote the position that coins are an investment medium.

This is not to imply that the transition from hobby to investment is or will ever be complete. Collectors still control large areas of numismatics, such as Early American coppers, tokens, medals and U.S. silver coinage struck prior to 1836. A large dollar volume of the investment business has been directed to coins, bullion pieces and similar precious-metal items made after 1836, particularly third-party-graded Morgan and Peace dollars, Walking Liberty half dollars, gold double eagles and commemorative half dollars.

I believe this approach was taken, at least in part, to ensure a future for those making a living through the sale of coins during this transitional period. This is not a condemnation—dealers simply did what was neces-

B. Max Mehl, Numismatist

P. O. BOX 826.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS.

THE NUMISMATIST (APRIL 1907)

From a modest beginning as a shoe clerk, Russian-born B. Max Mehl launched a numismatic career in the early years of the 20th century that would make him the most famous rare coin dealer in America. By expanding his market base, he introduced thousands of middle-class folks to coin collecting, formerly the domain of the leisure class.

sary to stay in business. They needed to expand their sales base, and it was (and is) more profitable to sell "investment quality" coins to investors than to create a new generation of collectors. The desire for quick and easy profits, with little or no thought for the future, seems to be a perennial human weakness.

During the period now viewed as the "Golden Age of Numismatics," the collecting of numismatic material generally was limited to a relatively small group of financially secure, if not wealthy, individuals. Because the laws of supply and demand were at play, the number of dealers was small as well.

The reason for this finite number of collectors is, in my opinion, explained by the theory of "conspicuous consumption" developed by economist and sociologist Thorstein Veblen (1857-1929). His hypothesis was based on these presumptions, from his Theory of the Leisure Class (1899):

1) Unproductive consumption of goods is honourable, primarily as a mark of prowess and a perquisite of human dignity; secondarily, it becomes substantially honourable in itself, especially the consumption of the more desirable things.

2) In the nature of things, luxuries and the comforts of life belong to the leisure class.

3) The consumption of luxuries, in the true sense, is a consumption directed to the comfort of the consumer himself, and is, therefore, a mark of the master.

WHEN THE HOBBY began in earnest in the United States, between 1850 and 1900, coins were collected by financially secure individuals as a leisure activity.

4) Conspicuous consumption of valuable goods is a means of reputability to the gentleman of leisure.

5) As wealth accumulates, the leisure class develops further in function and structure, and there arises a differentiation within the class. There is a more or less elaborate system of rank and grades.

6) The leisure class stands at the head of the social structure in point of reputability; and its manner of life and its standards of worth therefore afford the norm of reputability for the community. The observance of these standards, in some degree of approximation, becomes incumbent upon all classes lower in the scale.

7) The basis on which good repute in any highly organized industrial community ultimately rests is pecuniary strength; and the means of showing pecuniary strength, and so of gaining or retaining a good name, are leisure and a conspicuous consumption of goods.

With the introduction of the "penny board," some collectors took greater interest in the hobby. Filling all the holes in the board became as meaningful as wealth and status enhancement.

DAVID LANGE

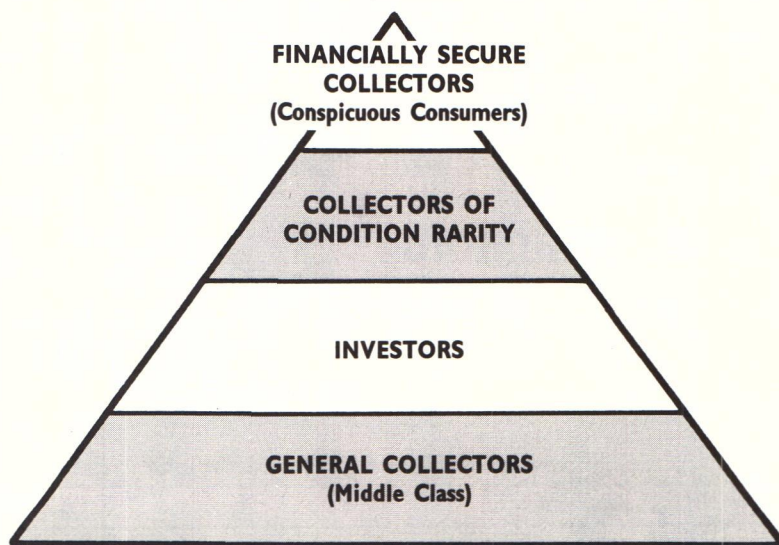

If these presumptions are applied to numismatics, much of what has happened in the history of coin collecting in the United States can be examined and explained. Although exceptions certainly exist, Veblen's theory can illuminate general trends and developments in numismatics.

When the hobby began in earnest in the United States, between 1850 and 1900, coins were collected by financially secure individuals as a leisure activity. The hobby was supported by a small number of dealers and, from time to time, by upper-level management at the United States Mint who created items of instant rarity for the wealthy and well-connected collector. (Examples of the latter include the Class III 1804 silver dollar, the 1884-85 Trade dollars, and a host of clandestinely produced pattern, off-metal and proof pieces.)

Collectors gave little thought to increasing the number of hobbyists and showed little concern for any profit when their collections were sold. Viewed in terms of Veblen's theory, any desire for profit would dilute the purpose of coin collecting as a display of leisure and wealth. As a matter of fact, major collections were sold for less than the cost of their acquisition.

Numismatic organizations also were open to a chosen few. Membership in the American Numismatic and Archaeological Society (later the American Numismatic Society) and the American Numismatic Association was limited to those proposed and approved by existing members. Through this process, the collecting fraternity established and maintained a social order. Individuals allowed into the organization gained prestige, recognition and status. Additionally, the organization provided peer support for the leisure activity and a status hierarchy for those involved.

The first four elements of Veblen's theory of the leisure class can be applied successfully to coin collecting in the 19th century. The collection of money simply for its accumulation and for "scholarly" study by a select few has all the hallmarks of a status-enhancing activity.

The primary ingredients for the conspicuous consumption of numismatic items were their rarity, desirability and/or price, each of which highlighted collecting as a status-enhancing activity. The Mint, dealers and other creators of numismatic collectibles were well aware of the importance of rarity to collectors. The status value of such items was in the disposable income and leisure time it represented. The greater the disposable income available for use in a hobby or other nonproductive activity, the higher the status of the collector in the eyes of his peers and the more conspicuous his consumption. This is as true today as it was in the early days of coin collecting.

Numismatics remained the domain of the wealthy and the small number of dealers who catered to their tastes until entrepreneurial dealer B. Max Mehl entered the scene and "penny boards" were introduced. These two elements, plus an increased standard of living and more leisure time for a larger segment of the population, provided the opportunity for the middle class to enter the numismatic arena.

The Sunface Coins of South Peru

PERUVIAN COINAGE

The rich symbolism and diverse designs of Peru's sunface coins reflect the unstable political and economic atmosphere during the nation's early stages of independence.

THE SUNFACE COINS of Peru produced in the Arequipa and Cuzco mints from 1837 to 1839 are possibly some of the most beautiful coins in the world. These coins can be collected and admired without any appreciation of their background. Among Peruvian coins, however, they are the richest in symbology, reflecting multiple aspects of the political and economic history of the turbulent times in which they were made. An understanding of this history allows us to better appreciate the many changes that occurred in this relatively short series of coins.

Political Background

PERU AND BOLIVIA were united politically during most of the colonial period. However, with independence finally won, they went their separate ways as nations. General Andrés de Santa Cruz, Simón Bolívar's chief of staff and an early vice president of Peru, was among the principal Peruvian leaders who dreamed of a reunion of the two countries. In 1829 he was elected president of Bolivia, and, as he rebuilt the country, he schemed and plotted to achieve that objective. Under his leadership, Bolivia was comparatively a model emergent state. At the same time, political chaos reigned in Peru as military leaders fought among themselves for power.

Santa Cruz's opportunity came in early 1835. General Felipe Salaverry rose in rebellion in Lima against General Luis José de Orbegoso, the elected president of Peru. Shortly thereafter, he controlled most of Peru, but, independently of Salaverry, Cuzco and Puno set up provisional governments that wished to have nothing to do with Orbegoso, who had established headquarters in Arequipa. On April 20, the British acting consul in Islay, Thomas Crompton, wrote:

In the meantime the country is convulsed with rival factions and completely involved in anarchy and disorder. . . . I am sorry to say that the President's

... THE FOUR DEPARTMENTS of Arequipa, Ayacucho, Cuzco and Puno were to be formed into a "free and independent" state called "Estado Sud-Peruano."

A major variety of the 8 reales, created by the use of 16 or 14 rays emanating from the sunface, can be found on both the FEDERACION and CONFEDERACION coins with both sets of assayer's initials.

Government is fallen into great discredit from its feebleness and incapacity. A revolutionary movement to deprive him of the command is daily expected to take place in Arequipa. The mass of the people there are averse to any further connection with Lima and wish to place these Provinces under the protection of General Santa Cruz the President of Bolivia, under whose government they hope to find security for their persons and property, and a cessation of the incessant revolutions which have latterly affected Peru.

Orbegoso and Agustín Gamarra, the former president of Peru, both sought Santa Cruz's support, but on June 15, 1835, a treaty of assistance was signed in La Paz, Bolivia, between representatives of Orbegoso and Santa Cruz. The Bolivians invaded Peru, initially defeating the forces of Gamarra and finally those of Salaverry at the battle of Socabaya on February 7, 1836. All of Peru was thus effectively dominated by Santa Cruz, who was proclaimed the "Pacificador del Peru" (Peacemaker of Peru) on March 2.

The treaty of assistance also called for a meeting of the departments of the South. The Assembly of Sicuani opened on March 10, 1836, declaring the following week that the four departments of Arequipa, Ayacucho, Cuzco and Puno were to be formed into a "free and independent" state called "Estado Sud-Peruano." It anticipated the formation of a confederation with Bolivia and a state to be formed in the North. Santa Cruz was named Supreme Protector of the Estado Sud-Peruano.

Subsequently, other activities were undertaken by the Assembly. On March 19 the president of the Assembly appointed a commission to make recommendations for a coat of arms and the type of money to be issued. Members of the commission were to be individuals "who had a scientific knowledge of this class of beautiful works." Appointed were Don Anselmo Centeno, deputy from Cuzco and director of the mint there (Casa de Moneda), and two deputies from Arequipa—Don Cesareo Vargas and Don Mariano Cosio (or Cossio). The latter subsequently became director of the Arequipa mint, which struck its first coins that year.

In any case, the recommendation of the commission on March 20 seems to have been based more on politics than on "scientific knowledge," for the proposal unanimously approved allowed Santa Cruz to make the decision as to the type of coins because "his great knowledge and view of the coins of other nations would allow a design that corresponds to and is conceptually most appropriate to the new State." An even more likely reason both for the specific makeup of the commission and its recommendation is that it permitted the continued deception of the public regarding the debasement of the coinage, which had already begun with the issuance of the 2 and 4 reales of Cuzco in 1835.

The other recommendation of the commission was made public and approved: the design of the coat of arms. It was to consist of a sun with four stars above—the sun represented the union of the three states (Bolivia, North Peru and South Peru), while the four stars symbolized the four departments comprising South Peru.

The use of the sun as a symbol is rooted deeply in Peruvian history. Cuzco was the ancient capital of the Incas, the "children of the sun." They worshipped the sun, believing it to be the omnipotent being, the father of all. It invariably was depicted with a human countenance. The anticipated confederation represented the heart of the ancient empire of the Incas, and thus the sun was a truly appropriate symbol for the union of the three states.

The declaration of independence was signed on March 18, 1836, and approved by Santa Cruz on March 22. A proclamation piece was issued on April 4, 1836, the obverse of which showed the coat of arms described above. In spite of opposition in the North, Orbegoso recognized the "free and independent" state of South Peru on May 4, 1836. There also was considerable opposition in Bolivia, but the Assembly of Tapacari readily approved the actions of Santa Cruz in June 1836.

The Monetary Law

THE BASIC DECREE governing the issuance of the surface coins was given a short time later (El Republicano, August 6, 1836):

The Council of Ministers in charge of the administration of the State

DECREE

Art. 1. The coins of gold and silver of the State will have the same shape, diameter, weight, fineness, divisions and names that the coins of the Republic of Peru had.

2. On the obverse of the coins of gold and silver will be engraved the arms of the State with this legend over all: "Estado Sud-Peruano" and in the exergue, the place and year of the minting, the place in letters and the year in numbers.

3. On the reverse the four departments will be represented: Ayacucho by the emblem of abundance: Cuzco by the fortress of the Incas: Arequipa by el Misti; and Puno by the lake of Titicaca.

4. The upper circumference of the reverse will read: firme por la union;

The reverse of this 1837 half real shows a symbolic Inca fortress surmounted by a headdress.

The 2 reales issued in Cuzco in 1837 features the same obverse design as coins made late in that year, but the reverse bears the designation 2 REALES and the assayer's initials B.A.

THESE CHANGES PRESENT three important aspects: the actual name of the new nation, the number of stars that appear above the sunface, and the edge inscription.

and in the exergue: federacion. Between both legends will be noted in abbreviation: to the right the fineness of the coin and to the left the name of the assayer.

5. On the reverse of the doubloons of two escudos, one escudo and a half escudo and on that of the silver coins, there will not be engraved the emblems of the third article; and in its place will be expressed the respective value of the coin between two laurels, in this form: "Dos Escudos," "Un Escudo," "Dos Reales," "Un Real," "Medio Real."

6. In place of the cord of the coins presently circulating these words will be engraved in relief: "Dios protege el Estado" divided one from the other by a cross; and the cord in the circumference of the obverse and the reverse of them.

7. In the Casa de Moneda of this capital will be engraved the matrices conforming to the designs approved on this date in order to pass them to the Casa de Moneda of Arequipa.

8. The Ministry of State of the office of the treasury will be in charge of the fulfillment of this decree and to have it printed, published and circulated.

Given in the Palace of Government in Cuzco July 25, 1836
Juan José Larrea - The Treasury Minister - Andres Maria Torrico

On this 1837 half real produced at the Arequipa mint, the denomination is inscribed within a wreath on the reverse, while the obverse carries the coat of arms with five stars, surrounded by the legend REPUB SUD PERUANA AREQ 1837.

The Coins

NO COINS MINTED in accord with this decree appeared until 1837, although it is interesting to note that none ever appeared in exact conformity with the specifications given above. All denominations made earlier in Peru were produced except the 2 and 4 escudos. No example of the 1-real coin is now known, although there is a contemporary reference to the coin. There were many changes in the design of the obverse (as described above), while the design of the reverse remained the same during the entire period. On the coins actually issued, the fortress of the Incas symbolizing Cuzco was surmounted by a headdress, with the two feathers as a sign of royal authority, and with condors to the right and left. A ship is also shown on Lake Titicaca. These "additions" are not necessarily inconsistent with the original law.

However, the changes on the reverse are much more prominent and, together with the inscription on the edge, suggest to some degree the order in which the coins appeared. The origin of all of these changes is not currently known, although some can be traced to decrees issued in the name of Santa Cruz. These changes present three important aspects: the actual name of the new nation, the number of stars that appear above the sunface, and the edge inscription (which appeared only on the edge of the 4 and 8 reales and the 8 escudos, a wreath having been used on the smaller coins).

IT DEFINITELY APPEARS that the period of production of the variety of the 8 reales of 1837 with assayer's initials B.A and FEDERACION was quite limited.

Only two denominations of coins with the inscription ESTADO SUD-PERUANO are currently known—both were minted in Cuzco. The 8 escudos of 1837 is as described above, with the addition of trophies surrounding the coat of arms, and four stars and the words DIOS PROTEGE EL ESTADO in relief on the edge. The half real of 1837 has the obverse described above; its reverse bears the symbol of the Inca fortress surmounted by the headdress described previously. The motto FIRME POR LA UNION is a part of the reverse legend, while the abbreviation FEDERAC and the initial "B" (presumably for Bernardo Aguilar, the mint's assayer) is also a part of the legend. In particular, there is no indication of denomination. Again, the terms "obverse" and "reverse" are deliberately used as designated in the decree.

The remaining coins issued both in Cuzco and Arequipa bear the designation REPUB SUD PERUANA and have five stars in the coat of arms rather than the four originally prescribed. The order changing the designation from ESTADO SUD-PERUANO has not yet been located. The name of the new nation initially was designated as "Estado Sud Peruano," but in the "Fundamental Pact of the Peru-Bolivian Confederation" signed in Tacna on May 1, 1837, Article 36 declared that "each one of the Republics will keep its coins that will circulate in all the territory of the Confederation." The name "República Sud Peruana" apparently was used as early as May 10, 1837, in a proclamation to the North Peruvians by Santa Cruz. The term "Estado Sud-Peruano" is used on an order of South Peru dated June 27, 1837, and "República Sud Peruana" is used on July 8, 1837.

The formation of a new department was first proposed in the Assembly of Sicuani, but the final decision was given to Santa Cruz. In a decree of April 25, 1837, he created the department of Tacna by separating the provinces of Tacna and Tarapacá from the department of Arequipa. On June 10, 1837, an order was issued calling for the number of stars on the coins to be increased. Subsequently, on June 21, Santa Cruz ordered that the word FEDERACION be changed to CONFEDERACION and reiterated the order to change the number of stars.

From a note of July 18, 1837, it is apparent that while the number of stars already was increased, the change to the use of CONFEDERACION remained to be accomplished. It definitely appears that the period of production of the variety of the 8 reales of 1837 with assayer's initials B.A (Bernardo Aguilar) and FEDERACION was quite limited.

The first peso, struck on April 9, 1838, was produced to the same specifications as the Spanish piece.

A Backward Glance at an American Bard

MEDALS

Known as the "Poet of Democracy," Walt Whitman broke with tradition by creating poetry that was newly American in subject and style.

by Marilyn Baker Reback
ANA 129422

"THERE IS MUCH more to national enrichment, material and moral, than the people who make its laws and run its institutions of governance. . . . So, to tutor the nation in the myriad sources of its greatness, let's scrub all the political people from the greenbacks."

Columnist George F. Will recently offered this suggestion in Newsweek magazine just as the coinage redesign debate grew hot in the numismatic community. Among the portraits Will proposed for our paper money was one for the $1,000 bill: "If money is, as Emerson said, the prose of life, let's put a poet on it, Emily Dickinson or Walt Whitman."

The 19th-century American poet Walt Whitman has never been officially recognized on United States money—paper or coin—or with a Congressional medal, for that matter. The September 1936 issue of The Numismatist did report that President Franklin D. Roosevelt had signed a bill "to provide for a monument to Walt Whitman, the poet." A response from Alfred McVay of Walla Walla, Washington, excerpted in the October 1936 issue, stated only that the commission in charge had judged that "the cost of the medal, as compared with the public demand, did not justify our going ahead with its issuance."

In reality, the intent of the bill was to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the arrival in Walla Walla of missionaries Marcus and Narcissa Whitman and the founding of the Waiilatpu Mission, as stipulated in the Act of June 26, 1936. An Act of June

Describing Whitman, William D. O'Connor, one of the poet's devoted friends, said, "I marked the countenance, serene, proud, cheerful, florid, grave; the brow seamed with noble wrinkles; the features, massive and handsome, with firm blue eyes . . ."

Produced by the Paris Mint, the 53rd edition of Le Club Français de la Médaille depicts a windblown Whitman by Henri Lagriffoul. Set amid a patch of grass on the medal's reverse is an excerpt from "To Foreign Lands" ("I heard that you ask'd for something to prove this puzzle the New World, [And to define America, her athletic Democracy, Therefore I send you my poems that you behold in them what you wanted.]").

I Whitman recalled that on the day Lincoln died "there were many lilacs in full bloom. By one of those caprices that enter and give tinge to events without being a part of them, I find myself always reminded of the great tragedy of that day by the sight and odor of these blossoms."

29, 1936, further provided for establishment of the Whitman National Monument, also a tribute to Marcus and Narcissa Whitman.

Had readers of The Numismatist been on their toes, they would have realized that celebrating a Walt Whitman centennial in 1936 would not have been logical, for the year 1836 holds no great significance in the poet's life. Born in 1819, Whitman published the first edition of Leaves of Grass in 1855, the epic that he would augment, rearrange and modify as his life's work.

Appropriately, Leaves of Grass appeared on or around the Fourth of July, for the man fancied himself the "bard of America" (He says in the preface to the first edition, "The American poets are to enclose old and new; for America is the race of races. Of them a bard is to be, commensurate with a people. . . . His spirit responds to his country's spirit . . .").

In the July 1890 issue of Harper's Monthly, a question was posed: "A hundred years from now will Walt Whitman be popularly rated a great poet—or will he be forgotten?" Whitman left this reply among his notes: "A mighty ticklish question—which can only be left for a hundred years hence."

A century seems an appropriate point at which to stop and impartially judge this famous personality's durability and greatness. Some 100 years have passed since Whitman died on March 26, 1892. He has not been forgotten. His work and his controversial lifestyle have been scrutinized, analyzed and criticized. However, that he redefined the style and theme of American poetry and that he deserves to be called the "Poet of Democracy" is generally agreed.

Probably the most familiar of Whitman's works is "O Captain! My Captain!," a tribute to President Abraham Lincoln, penned shortly after his assassination. One of just two poems Whitman wrote in rhyming verse, it is an obvious departure from his style. Combined with "When Lilacs Last in the Door Yard Bloom'd,"¹ "Hush'd be the Camps To-Day" and "This Dust Was Once the Man" in a section called "Memories of President Lincoln," Whitman placed "O Captain! My Captain!" at the heart of Leaves of Grass in 1881. The section forms a heartfelt tribute, for Whitman believed that Lincoln was the ultimate democratic President—a common man with elements of greatness.

At first Whitman was not impressed with Lincoln. He had seen him in person on a number of occasions, in New York and in Washington. As the war progressed, his feelings toward Lincoln changed, and he eventually came to almost worship him. He saw the tragedy of the Civil War in the President's face, remarking in a June 30, 1863, letter to his mother, "he looks more careworn even than usual, his face with deep cut lines, seams, and his complexion gray through very dark skin—a curious looking man, very sad." In a letter of October 27 he said, "I have finally made up my mind that Mr. Lincoln has done as good as a human man could do. . . . I realize here in Washington that it has been a big thing to have just kept the United States from being thrown down and having its throat cut."

In later years, Whitman was noted for giving an address on the anniversaries of Lincoln's death, in which he said, in part, "When, centuries hence, . . . the leading historians and dramatists seek for some personage, some special event, incisive enough to mark with deepest cut, and mnemonize, this turbulent Nineteenth century of ours, . . . those historians will seek in vain for any point to serve more thoroughly their purpose, than Abraham Lincoln's death."

Events of the Civil War were responsible for the maturing of Whitman's democratic theme. The poet had come to Washington, D.C., after his brother George was wounded, and he stayed on to visit and comfort the injured in Union hospitals. Although he came from a Quaker background, Whitman was not opposed to the idea of war itself, but he perceived the Civil War as a real threat to democracy in the New World. He gathered his observations on the war in a collection of poems entitled Drum Taps.

In 1934 Henry A. Myers summarized Whitman's view of democracy:

Out of the American democracy of 1855, Walt Whitman constructed an inner complement to the outer world, a spiritual democracy governed by two principles, one the unlimited individual, the other the equality of individuals. . . . each verse is an attempt to read these inner principles through the maze and confusion of life on the surface.

O Captain! My Captain!

O Captain! my Captain! our fearful trip is done,
The ship has weather'd every rack, the prize we sought is won,
The port is near, the bells I hear, the people all exulting, While follow eyes the steady keel, the vessel grim and daring;
But O heart! heart! heart!
O the bleeding drops of red,
Where on the deck my Captain lies,
Fallen cold and dead.

O Captain! my Captain! rise up and hear the bells;
Rise up—for you the flag is flung—for you the bugle trills, For you bouquets and ribbon'd wreaths—for you the shores a-crowding,
For you they call, the swaying mass, their eager faces turning;
Here Captain! dear father!
This arm beneath your head!
It is some dream that on the deck,
You've fallen cold and dead.

My Captain does not answer, his lips are pale and still,
My father does not feel my arm, he has no pulse nor will,
The ship is anchor'd safe and sound, its voyage closed and done,
From fearful trip the victor ship comes in with object won;
Exult O shores, and ring O bells!
But I with mournful tread,
Walk the deck my Captain lies,
Fallen cold and dead.

IN THE PREFACE to the 1855 edition of Leaves of Grass Whitman remarked, "The proof of a poet is that his country absorbs him as affectionately as he has absorbed it."

The 54th issue of the Society of Medalists, created by Paul Fjelde, commemorates the 100th anniversary of the first publication of Leaves of Grass. The obverse carries Whitman's portrait with the title of the poem that epitomizes his style at its best, "Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking." The reverse shows recurring symbols from his works—a singing thrush and lilacs.

In the preface to the 1855 edition of Leaves of Grass Whitman remarked, "The proof of a poet is that his country absorbs him as affectionately as he has absorbed it." But, he did not witness this proof, for critical acclaim in this country was slow in coming. Whitman's poems were first accepted overseas. Even on the 30th anniversary of Whitman's death, Bernard Shaw remarked that "Whitman is a classic, not a best seller. Curious that America should be the only country in which this is not as obvious as the sun in the heavens."

Over time, however, American critics have looked past his eccentricities and focused on his work. Whitman's poetic legacy has been interpreted on medallic art produced in this country and abroad. These pieces capture a bit of a man who absorbed the expanding, changing scene of 19th-century America and devoted the bulk of his life to expressing what he saw. •

How to Become a Part-Time Coin Dealer

Thinking of starting a part-time business as a coin dealer? Here are a few pointers from a collector who took the plunge.

by Gregory Olin Whitney
ANA 139429

AS A COIN collector, have you found your personal collection overflowing with duplicates? Have you ever purchased a coin just because it was a great buy, figuring on trading it sometime? Seeing the excitement of a coin show, have you thought, "I could buy and sell coins at shows just like these dealers"?

Becoming a part-time coin dealer is not as hard as you might think. Like anything else in life, first you must plan. Remember: those who fail to plan, plan to fail. Lay out the foundation of your new numismatic venture with the skills you have acquired in assembling your personal coin collection. But, before you start, ask yourself these questions:

- 1) What level can I, and do I, want to achieve? Will I be satisfied with a happy-go-lucky hobby, or do I want to reach a serious dealer level in which my bottom line is making money?
- 2) What is required in the way of licensing, bookkeeping, taxes, inventory and security?
- 3) Do I have sufficient knowledge of coins and grading?
- 4) How much can I afford to lose if I make a mistake?
- 5) What are the benefits of being a part-time coin dealer?

If you mull over these questions for a few days and conclude that you have what it takes, then go ahead with your venture. Formulate a one-year plan that considers start-up expenses versus a break-even or profit point.

Your first step is to address the legal issues. Talk with an attorney about your plans. The money you invest in this effort will be wisely spent.

IF YOU PLAN to buy or sell at coin shows, be aware that sales tax regulations vary. Each city, county and state has its own requirements.

Getting Started

IN MOST LOCALITIES you will need a resale license. This can be obtained for a few dollars from your local tax authority. Your next step, if you choose not to do business under your own name, will be acquiring a business or trade name. Try to come up with a catchy, positive-sounding name that will be easy for your clients to remember. Make the name short but sweet. You must then file a "Doing Business As" (DBA) form with your local authorities. After completing this form, you must publish a public notice of your intent to use a fictitious name by placing an announcement in a local newspaper.

Your resale and DBA certificates must be posted in a prominent spot in your place of business. Like most part-time dealers, you will probably work out of your home. Set aside a working area or a separate room. Expenses such as business-related telephone calls and automobile use qualify as tax write-offs.

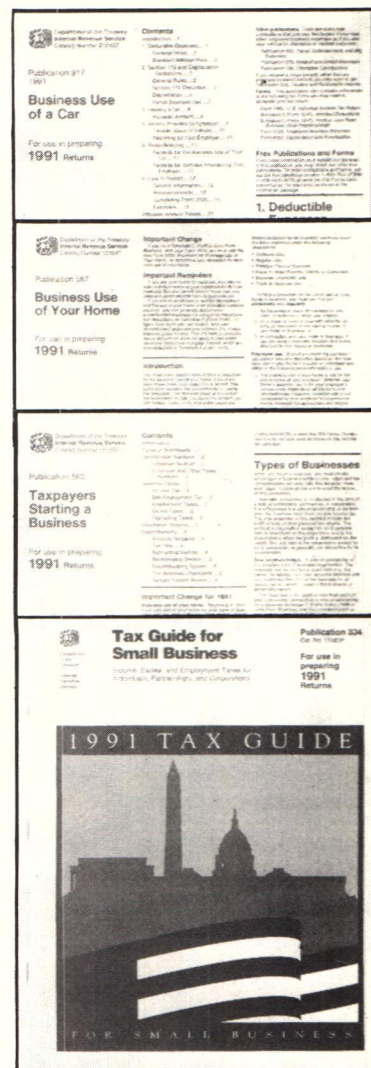

If you plan to buy or sell at coin shows, be aware that sales tax regulations vary. Each city, county and state has its own requirements. Mail-order sales bring up another variation of the sales tax system. Check out the regulations in the localities that will affect your business.

A business checking account is another necessity. Compare costs at different banking institutions, such as per-check fees or a flat monthly account fee. Even a slight monthly difference can add up over the long run. If you are using a business or trade name, you must provide the bank with the appropriate documentation. You also must use either your personal Social Security number (at no cost) or obtain a Federal Tax I.D. number. To avoid tax-time nightmares, do not use this account for anything other than business-related purchases.

There are several ways of keeping your coin buying and selling records in order. If you are weak in this area, hire a bookkeeper. If you have a personal computer, it can be used to your advantage. Various programs are available to help you. (I just follow a normal accounting layout. You can buy a business ledger from a stationery store and copy the format to your computer.) Most of you will want to keep hand-written records as well, a necessity if you go to coin shows but don't have the luxury of a portable computer.

Security

SECURITY IS YOUR responsibility. Theft, fire and vandalism are real hazards. Always keep a current list of your inventory in your possession; Informative booklets available free of charge from the Internal Revenue Service include "Tax Guide for Small Business" (Publication 334), "Taxpayers Starting a Business" (Publication 583), "Business Use of Your Home" (Publication 587), and "Business Use of Your Car" (Publication 917).

YOU'RE LIKELY TO have some numismatic material around your home . . . Don't hide your stock under your bed or in some other obvious place.

give a duplicate copy to a family member or a friend you can trust. Keep security measures in line with the scale of your business. Start by keeping your most valuable stock in a safe-deposit box. Note that banks do not insure the contents of safe-deposit boxes against employee theft or outside burglary.

You're likely to have some numismatic material around your home while you attribute and process coins you purchase or prepare for resale. (Also, remember that you don't have 24-hour access to your bank safe-deposit box.) Don't hide your stock under your bed or in some other obvious place. Obtain a safe that is fireproof and large enough to hold your household coin stock, with extra space for documents and the like.

To be truly effective, a safe should be either too heavy to move with ease or bolted to the floor. Don't get a small, portable safe unless you plan to bolt it down and shear off the bolts. (However, do not do this if you are renting your house or apartment.) A large, antique safe can be attractive and reasonably priced, depending on where you purchase it, and it can give a would-be burglar a hernia if he tries to move it.

Alarm systems are an option you should consider. Go with those types that notify the police department directly. Cheap home alarm systems are just that—cheap.

For security reasons, it is best to use a post office box for your business mail. You may want to use your home phone when starting out, but get a separate line if business grows sufficiently.

Be sure to acquire a business-type insurance policy. If you are a member of the American Numismatic Association (ANA), inquire about special insurance programs for collectors and dealers handled by the ANA's group plan administrator, Albert H. Wohlers & Company. Rates vary, so shop around. Make certain the agency you choose is reliable.

Don't get too carried away with your precautions, though. There is no point in over-protecting or over-insuring. Keep things in perspective.

Everyday Needs

ANOTHER NECESSITY FOR a new business is stationery and business cards. Check prices at local print shops. Compare different types of paper; avoid "onionskin," since it rips very easily. A good, 20-pound paper usually will do the trick. Remember, your stationery represents you and your business! Make it attractive and a little catchy, but not loud. Choose something that will make a positive impression on your business contacts.

I have found that I can save by buying my stationery by mail. For example, I can purchase 500 business cards from a local printer for $25 to $45. By mail order, I can buy the same quality cards for $14.50 to $19, plus shipping. With today's environmental concerns, you might think about using recycled paper products. Save a tree, and more. It shows that you care!

Stationery and business cards should include the name of your business, your name, complete address (post office box number, city, state and zip code) and telephone number. I have found it handy to include my re-sale permit number as well.

Always carry a fair amount of business cards with you for potential clients. Give out two: one for the person you are doing business with and another for one of their friends. It works.

Numismatic books are a very important investment. You must acquire a reasonably sized reference library. If you deal in coins other than those you collect, you must have sufficient knowledge of that area.

I've heard from other dealers time and time again that you cannot deal and collect coins at the same time. I personally have broken this cardinal rule. I enjoy collecting Civil War tokens. Not only is the history of these tokens overwhelming, but also most of them are modestly priced. If you dabble in both areas, your profit margin will not be as high, but you will have a great time. It's a wonderful way to upgrade your own collection.

It's wise to subscribe to The Coin Dealer Newsletter. It will give you a better idea of dealers' buy/sell prices. Some coins vary in price depending on current demand. If you can't swing a subscription, a more affordable alternative would be the weekly "Trends" column in Coin World.

Building Your Inventory

NOW, WHERE WILL you get the coins you plan to re-sell? One great place to hunt for possible coin buys is at local antique shops. Other sources to check are friends, family and co-workers. Local yard or rummage sales also can be a fair source.

Buying from other dealers is an option once you establish a regular clientele. You need to know what your clients collect and need. Be careful here, though. When I first became a part-time dealer, I bought coins that I assumed my clients wanted. This proved to be an expensive lesson. Make sure your client really wants a coin before you invest money in it. If I cannot acquire a piece at a fair price, I do not buy it, unless it is truly difficult to locate or if price is not an object to my client. Try to at least get a deposit from your client if you are going to a coin show with a huge "want list."

If they are overstocked, some coin dealers might give you more than the regular dealer-to-dealer discount. Look around, making note of who sells what. Then compare this to your clients' want lists. Your profit margin will be close, since the dealer likely has a greater overhead than you do.

Selling Your Coins

THE QUESTION OF where to deal coins is familiar. I started at a local coin club. Then I went on to coin shows, splitting bourse table costs with a dealer friend. This is a good way to cut expenses. Always take a family member or trustworthy friend along to help—you will need a break sometime during the show, and another set of eyes to keep watch over your stock doesn't hurt.

Flea markets are another avenue for sales. You will need display cases and a table or two, either rented or your own. Again, be sure to take along a person you can trust. For security purposes, I would avoid taking high-ticket items to a flea market. Common collector coins, silver dollars, proof sets and topical coins (such as those with animal motifs, often used as jewelry) sell best. Keep a close eye on your cases.

It pays to put out a "goody box" of reasonably priced world coins, Wheat cents and similar items. Youngsters will have a field day looking through the box for that "special" coin. If you break up sets for single-coin

The Royal Ladies

The Royal Australian Mint announces the issue of The Royal Ladies proof sets. With the assent of Buckingham Palace, this official coin release commemorates the 40th Anniversary of the accession of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II to the throne of England.

Featuring specially commissioned portraits by Stuart Devlin, Goldsmith and Jeweller to Her Majesty, these unique sets have been issued in strictly limited numbers, ensuring their status as heirlooms of significant worth.

Their presentation is in keeping with their value. The 22 carat gold set comes in a specially crafted presentation case of native Australian timbers; the sterling silver set nestles in the warm glow of a leather-look case. Both come with extensive biographical notes and numismatic details.

The Royal Ladies proof sets have already attracted unprecedented levels of interest and will undoubtedly become a benchmark in numismatic achievements as one of the most highly sought after international releases for many years. Availability will be limited and prompt reservation is essential.

Further information is available from the Mint's display at the Convention.

Collecting the USA/Philippines Series

LAST MONTH'S COLUMN featured a brief overview of the USA/Philippines coinage and its history. This month, I'd like to describe some of the specific coins in this series that make it so fascinating.

The mass melting of 1903-06 coins, which occurred following the 1907 reduction in standards, caused several of these issues to become scarce or rare. The biggest loser was the 1906-S peso, the only silver coin struck for circulation that year. Nearly its entire mintage was returned to the San Francisco Mint for destruction. There are probably no more than 100 survivors, although these typically grade Very Fine (VF) to Extremely Fine (EF). Even this small amount of wear is surprising, since their bullion value already exceeded their face value. Perhaps these coins became trade dollars in Southeast Asia like so many of the silver pesos. Chopmarked examples dated 1906-S lend credence to this theory.

The 1903-S date seems to have survived in greater numbers. It is easily the most common large-size peso in higher grades, including Mint State (MS). Of course the word "common" is relative, as some of the scarcest Morgan dollar dates likely exist in quantities equal to the 1903-S peso. If you assemble a type collection of these coins, this date will probably be your hole filler. Uncirculated examples usually are quite heavily scuffed and scratched, and some of the most attractive pieces are actually "sliders" grading About Uncirculated (AU) 55 or 58. These may feature deep, original toning, although most have been cleaned at one time or another. The high heat and humidity typical of the Philippines does not lend itself to the long-term preservation of coins. I suspect that the finest specimens seen in collections today may have never left the United States.

We know that quite a few of the USA/Philippines issues were sold directly to American collectors. In addition to the complete proof sets struck at the Philadelphia Mint from 1903 through 1906 and again in 1908, special editions of the regular coinage also were prepared for sale at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in 1904. Although not true proofs, these sets were superior in quality to circulation strikes and account for most of the large-size silver pieces certified by the commercial grading services as MS-64 and higher. The Philadelphia Mint prepared 10,000 of these sets dated 1904 for sale by Farran Zerbe at the exposition. Most of the sets were not sold and were shipped to the Philippines as regular coinage. Even so, of the fractional silver coins from 1903-06, the 1904 is the date most often seen in high grade.

Returning to scarce coins, the 1903-S 50 centavos is a controversial rarity. Because it was a first-year-of-issue coin, one would expect that many were struck. No mintage is recorded for this date, yet two examples are known. These remain the subject of debate, as agreement on their authenticity is not unanimous. Also scarce, although collectable, are the 1903-S 10- and 20-centavo coins. These seem to be available in circulated grades, but specimens grading AU and higher are very elusive. It is ironic that the fractional coins of this date and mint are so scarce when the peso is categorized as one of the most common 1903-06 issues.

The recoinage of silver, begun in 1907, saw the destruction of many earlier pieces, yet there are some scarce issues among the later dates as well. The 15 million pesos' worth of silver coins dumped into Caballo Bay in 1942 to prevent their capture by enemy forces primarily affected the small-size 1-peso coins—but many of the fractional pieces also were lost during the war. Coins that fell into enemy hands usually were sent home and rendered into bullion. Filipinos, wary of the Japanese paper money forced on them during the occupation, often buried their silver coins. When people died or relocated, some of this silver was lost.

The 1909-S 10 centavos can be included among the scarce silver coins of the post-1907 period. This date is challenging to locate in all grades, and uncirculated examples are rare. The 1910-S 10 centavos is unknown in any collection, although five to ten pieces reportedly were struck. Another tough date is 1915, although it may be found with some patience. When the new Manila Mint began producing this denomination in 1920, only half a million pieces were coined, making it the single, remaining key date in the 10-centavo series. The large coinage of fractional silver during World War I left a surplus of 10-centavo pieces; none were coined from 1922-28 and again from 1930-34.

The large wartime coinage also provides some suitable dates for the type collector. With a bit of looking, the 1918-S usually is available in choice condition. Another possibility for a type set is the 1929-M. These frequently are found with nice luster, although the quality of strike may vary.

The 20-centavo coin was struck in smaller numbers than the other denominations, making it the most difficult series to complete in mint state. Even in EF or AU, many dates are challenging. Prominent among these again are 1909-S and 1910-S. Unlike the 10-centavo series, however, both of these are collectable. The 1911-S rounds out this trio of semi-key dates. Although it has a higher mintage than the first three, 1914-S seems to be even tougher to locate in EF or better condition. It's the date on everyone's want list.

Another coin that is eagerly sought, although somewhat overrated in rarity, is the 1928-M. This is the only Manila Mint coin in the 20-centavo series that can be considered scarce. As you may remember from last month's column, this issue resulted from the muling of a 20-centavo obverse die and a 5-centavo reverse die. No dies for the 20-centavo piece had been shipped that year; the only compatible die on hand was for the 5-centavo denomination. Accordingly, 100,000 of these coins were struck in silver to fill a rush order for 20-centavo pieces.

Although commonly listed as 1928/7-M, I've not been able to discern any trace of an overdate, even on mint-state coins. Still, this issue is fascinating to own because of its curious nature. To prevent a possible recurrence of such mulings, the 5 centavos was reduced in diameter beginning with pieces dated 1930. Such details make these coins come alive for the imaginative collector.

Finding a suitable type coin in mint state is challenging for the 20-centavo issues of 1907-29. The date most readily available in choice condition is 1921. These coins were struck at Manila, yet they do not carry a mint-mark (the familiar M was not utilized until 1925).

The 50-centavo series was coined only briefly after standards were lowered in 1907. The price of silver continued to rise, and this denomination became attractive to speculators. 1909-S was the last date struck until 1917, and it is the only scarce date in the small-size 50-centavo series. Mint-state examples are extremely difficult to locate.

Coinage resumed in 1917 in response to a serious shortage of fractional silver. The onset of World War I led to widespread hoarding of the precious metal in the Philippines as it had elsewhere around the world. Millions of 50-centavo pieces were coined at San Francisco from 1917 through 1919 and at Manila in 1920-21. A great many of these were stashed by the public as a bullion reserve, and mint-state pieces remain common today. Most of these, however, are far from choice, heavily abraded surfaces being the rule.

As the price of silver returned to a reasonable level during the post-war period, coinage production tapered off. Like the 10- and 20-centavos, the Pesos struck as part of a three-coin set commemorating the establishment of the Commonwealth of the Philippines feature portraits of outgoing Governor General Frank Murphy and incoming President Manuel Quezon (top) and President Franklin Roosevelt and Quezon (bottom). The third coin, a 50-centavo piece, displays facing portraits of Murphy and Quezon.

50-centavos was not coined throughout most of the 1920s. In fact, the only issue of this denomination between 1921 and 1944 was the Commonwealth commemorative struck in 1936. This was a non-circulating coin sold to collectors as part of a three-coin set including two commemorative pesos.

The silver peso was similar to the 50-centavos in that it frequently was targeted by silver speculators. Although reduced in both weight and fineness in 1907, its intrinsic value was still perilously close to its face value. Coinage of this denomination continued through 1912, largely as a necessity. The silver certificates that circulated in the Philippines were backed by silver pesos, requiring that a certain number of these coins be stored at the Philippine Treasury. When the speculative market in silver grew out of hand in 1917-18, a solution to both problems was found by replacing the silver certificates with treasury certificates. These could be backed by other assets rather than specifically by peso coins. No more pesos were coined after 1912, with the exception of the 1936 commemorative issues.

None of the small-size pesos can be considered rare, although 1911-S and 1912-S are difficult to locate in grades AU and higher. These had mintages substantially lower than for earlier dates. Like all silver pesos of the 1907-12 period, these dates were further reduced in number by the dumping of millions of pesos in 1942. Although most of this silver ultimately was recovered, the coins were no longer of value except as souvenirs. The most common date in mint state is 1908-S, although these typically are heavily abraded from years of storage and transfer. Gem examples are nearly unknown.

The minor coinage of the Philippines during the period of American administration consisted of bronze half- and 1-centavo pieces, as well as copper-nickel 5 centavos. The half centavo was coined for circulation during 1903-04 alone; the scarce coins in this series are the proof-only issues dated 1905, 1906 and 1908.

Among the 1-centavo coins, no date struck for circulation is considered rare overall. Even so, there are a few condition rarities. Dates that can be described as scarce in mint state include 1909-S, 1915-S and 1920-S. The last of these is particularly desirable, as it was the only USA/Philippines coin struck at San Francisco in that year. All other 1920-dated pieces were coined at Manila.

The 5-centavo denomination includes some of the scarcest issues in the USA/Philippines series. Unlike the silver coins, which were widely hoarded at various times, the base-metal 5-centavo piece circulated freely. Of the early issues bearing the colonial arms, the only dates common in mint state are 1903 and 1904. The first survives as a result of the tendency of both collectors and the general public to save new coin types, the other through inclusion in the special sets sold at St. Louis in 1904.

Coinage of the 5 centavos for circulation was halted from 1905 to 1915, apparently because an adequate supply was on hand. The S-Mint coins of 1916-19 are all available in lower grades, but coins qualifying as AU and higher are quite elusive. Of course, the very rare muling dated 1918-S is included among these. The quantity struck of this accidental issue remains unknown, but it must have been quite small. Survivors in any grade are rare.

The Manila Mint issues of 1920, 1921 and 1925-28 also are scarce in uncirculated condition. Like the S-Mint coins, they suffer from poor strike, and many details are ill-defined. This is less of a problem with the 1927-M and 1928-M. These seem to have been made with a bit more care. The reduced-size 5-centavos of 1930 to 1935 are routinely found with weak strikes and poorly prepared planchets. Particularly scarce in mint state are the 1934-M and 1935-M.

Creation of the Commonwealth of the Philippines in 1935 was recorded on the 1936 commemoratives already described. The colonial design on circulating coinage, in use since 1903, was not replaced until 1937. None of the coins from this date through the end of U.S. administration in 1946 can be described as rare or even scarce. Production at the Manila Mint was halted by the Japanese occupation of 1942-44, and later coins were struck in the United States. Although choice uncirculated examples may be challenging to locate for some of the 1937-41 Manila issues, the type collector will be easily satisfied with the 1944-45 coinage from Philadelphia, Denver and San Francisco.

An absence of suitable albums and display holders may dissuade some from collecting the USA/Philippines series. Years ago, Whitman Coin Products sold a type-set album covering the later Spanish colonial issues, the entire American period and the early issues of the Republic. Out of print, used copies still turn up in coin shops from time to time.

A few other albums covering the entire series by date and mint have been marketed on a limited basis from time to time. These are now too rare to satisfy the demand from collectors and they have themselves become collectable items. Individual coin holders may be the only solution for the time being. It doesn't seem likely that sufficient demand exists for any company to design a new album for this series by date and mint, but a type album may be a realistic possibility.

Before leaving the subject of USA/Philippines coinage, I'd like to describe some of the literature available. The most useful book for the collector of this series is Neil Shafer's United States Territorial Coinage for The Philippine Islands (ANA Library Cat. No. KB50.S5), published by Whitman in 1961 and now out of print. However, copies routinely turn up and are typically priced at around $5. Although the pricing information is obsolete, the historical and technical data is still unrivaled in creating an understanding of these overlooked U.S. coins.

A title that complements this work is Coins, Medals and Tokens of The Philippines (ANA Library Cat. No. KB30.B37), written and published by the late Aldo Basso. Although the author's coverage of the American series is less detailed than Shafer's, collectors may wish to place the 1903-45 coinage in a larger numismatic context. This Basso does well by listing nearly all of the numismata associated with Philippine history, excepting paper money. This book, although likewise out of print, frequently can be found in numismatic literature auctions. Its value is around $10 to $15.

A well-illustrated historical review of all Philippine coinage is found in Pilonicitos to Pesos (ANA Library Cat. No. KB50.G3) by Angelita Ganzon de Legarda. Published in association with the Central Bank of the Philippines, its release in 1976 celebrated the completion of the bank's new headquarters building and the mounting of its numismatic exhibit. This is a fun book to browse through, admiring the splendid photographs, many of which are in color. Although difficult to locate in the United States, this title still may be available from the Central Bank of the Philippines.

For current pricing information, collectors will want Krause Publications'

Standard Catalog of World Coins (ANA Library Cat. No. CC87.K7 1992). Published almost annually, this work lists all of the USA/Philippines issues, including some interesting varieties not found in Shafer's monograph. Although the prices shown for many scarce dates are unrealistically low, especially for mint-state examples, the relative scarcity of each issue can be clearly ascertained. Nearly all sellers of current numismatic books offer this title.

Rather than purchasing these books, you may first wish to examine them. All are available to ANA members through the American Numismatic Association Resource Center. In addition, several specialized monographs are available from the ANA and will appeal to more advanced collectors of the USA/Philippines series. •

A New Book on Half Dimes

“BUY THE BOOK before the coin,” is a very useful and valuable saying—one often attributed to Aaron Feldman, a New York City dealer who, in the later years of his life, specialized in numismatic literature. When I became interested in numismatics in the early 1950s, I spent more money on books than anything else. At that time, books were expensive and coins were cheap! A copy of the Adams-Woodin reference on United States pattern coins was apt to cost $20 or more, while a proof trade dollar of the 1873-83 era would cost no more than that.

Today, the situation is different. Books are cheap, often incredibly so, and coins are expensive. There are, however, exceptions to both cases.

More good numismatic books have been published in the past 25 years than during the entire preceding century. The rise of specialized groups and organizations such as the Early American Coppers club, the Liberty Seated Collectors Club, the John Reich Collectors Society, the Token and Medal Society and others has encouraged scholarship and led to the publication of many worthwhile references.

Such an addition to my bookshelf, and perhaps to yours as well, is a new book by Al Blythe, The Complete Guide to Liberty Seated Half Dimes. The author has been active in numismatics for more than a decade and is known as a regular contributor to The Gobrecht Journal, the official organ of the Liberty Seated Collectors Club.

Using a format popularized by David Akers in his pioneering studies of gold coins published in the 1970s, Blythe has made each variety of Liberty Seated half dime from 1837-73 a separate “chapter” in the book—each with its own page (or more), separate heading and enlarged photographs. Obviously a student of numbers and statistics, the author has devoted a generous amount of space to each issue's rarity at various grade levels, including Good to Very Good (G-VG), Fine to Very Fine (F-VF), Extremely Fine to About Uncirculated (EF-AU) and Mint State (MS). For example, at the grade level G-VG the two rarest varieties in the series are the 1839-O "large O" and the 1849 "small-O, without drapery."

Among mint-state coins the rarest piece is, logically, the unique 1870-S, followed by a group of coins in the rarity-7 (4 to 12 known) category: 1838-O, 1840 "small-O, without drapery"; 1840 "small-O, with drapery"; 1846; 1848-O "small-O"; 1853-O "no arrows"; and the 1859 transitional piece.

Particularly puzzling to any collector of half dimes, especially a novice, is the situation of 1849 overdates. Blythe does not solve the matter, but he makes it much clearer. Two pages are devoted to the "1849/8" and one to the "1849/6," prefaced with this caveat: "This overdate, as well as the 1849/6, is controversial. Differences of opinion exist as to what these overdates really are." Enlarged illustrations make it possible for the reader to reach his own conclusions.

One of the rarest and most curious coins among half dimes is the 1853-O without arrows at the date. The reader is told that although 160,000 were minted, most were melted (because at the time the bullion value of silver exceeded the face value of the coins, and there was no reason for the Mint to release them). Blythe explains further,

This date is almost always seen with a very weak date, and although I have seen one specimen, an AU, with all numbers well defined, most specimens show some softness in the head and shield, but with full definition of Ms. Liberty's toe. The 18 in the date [is] especially weak. The pendant is centered between the 5 and the 3, the shield points to the right of the 1 and 8, but closer to the 1. Stars are strongly punched and well defined. On the reverse, there is some softness noted in the 1 of DIME. Dentils are also weak in places. The Large O mint mark is bold, measures 1.2 millimeters, and tilts slightly to the left. It is closer to the right ribbon bow.

Apparently, just one die variety is known of the 1853-O "without arrows" half dime. Over the years, I have handled perhaps 50 to 100 such coins, each one very weakly defined.

On more common dates, such as the 1853 Philadelphia coin with arrows, the author does not endeavor to be comprehensive. Indeed, additional detail would probably double or triple the size of the book. He notes: "There are 78 obverses and 80 reverses known plus many mulings. A description of all of these is beyond the scope of this book. Readers are referred to Valentine and Neil for more detail." Actually, the Valentine and Neil references do not come close to describing 78 obverses and 80 reverses.

One of the most interesting of all Liberty Seated half dimes is the 1858 "over inverted date." The date was first punched in the die upside down, noticed and then corrected. Amazingly, this variety was not known to numismatists until the early 1960s—showing that discoveries can still be made. Indeed, among Liberty Seated coins of all denominations, many discoveries have been made in recent years.

The new book informs us that the 1858 "over inverted date" is "scarce but can be found with diligent searching." A survey taken earlier among members of the Liberty Seated Collectors Club revealed 48 different specimens in collectors' hands, but it is my opinion that the true population is probably several times that.

The Complete Guide to Liberty Seated Half Dimes* by Al Blythe does not solve the controversial 1849 overdates problem. However, enlarged photographs of the dates (such as those above) allow the reader to reach his own conclusions.

One of the greatest numismatic discoveries was made around 1980 and subsequently announced to the numismatic world by Ed Milas of Rarcoa. The 1870-S half dime was previously unknown. Apparently, just a few were made. The new book devotes two pages to the issue and its history. Reflective of the truism that grading is more an art than a science, this same coin was graded AU-55 in 1985, but is now in a PCGS holder marked MS-63.

The Complete Guide to Liberty Seated Half Dimes bears a cover price of $29.95 and is worth every penny (or half dime) of that price. Containing 168 pages, it is an excellent "action manual" for anyone even remotely interested in the series.

A Symbol of Czechoslovak Liberty

ON OCTOBER 23, 1991, two years after the "Velvet Revolution" took place in Czechoslovakia, a ceremony held in Washington, D.C., probably went unnoticed by most Americans except those of Czech and Slovak heritage. On that day, Czechoslovak President Vaclav Havel, who, as a poet and writer led the 1989 revolution, was presented with the original Czechoslovak Constitution of 1920; it had been entrusted to the government of the United States since it was smuggled out of the country just before the German invasion in 1939.

Remaining even today are some symbols of the 1939 invasion that relate to paper money of the region. The occupying German authorities ordered the production of currency for the puppet state of Bohemia and Moravia, which was situated within the borders of the former republic of Czechoslovakia. Designer Max Švabinský and engraver Jindra Schmidt created a 50-korun note at the National Printing Works for Securities in Prague. The note carried a female image of Liberty wearing a 2,000-year-old symbol of freedom, the liberty cap. This representation of freedom did not go unnoticed by the authorities. Schmidt was immediately ordered to reengrave the female head to eliminate all traces of the cap.

Notes of other denominations were prepared and accepted for use in Bohemia and Moravia. The German authorities had made clear what would and would not be accepted from bank note artists. In 1945, a few months after Czechoslovakia was liberated, a new 100-korun note was issued. It featured the original version of the Švabinský-Schmidt representation of Liberty with her symbolic headdress.

I was in Czechoslovakia in September 1990, 51 years after the country was invaded. As I was leaving what is now known as the State Printing Works for Securities in Prague, one of the engravers came outside and called me back. He pointed to a stone head that was the central figure on the façade of the building. With the assistance of a translator, he told me the following story.

The building was officially opened in 1928, 10 years after the Republic of Czechoslovakia was declared. Alfons Mucha, the world-famous high priest of art nouveau, created as the focal point of his design for the façade a symbolic figure of Liberty wearing a liberty cap.

Only the elements of pollution touched Mucha's creation until the occupation of Prague during World War II. Then, from those who would prove to be far more destructive, came the order to remove the liberty cap from the figure. The people who were to carry out the order may have had no understanding of the symbolism they were told to obliterate; however, I feel confident that they understood fully by the time the laborious task was completed. I hope the story of the liberty cap's origin as a symbol worn by slaves who had gained their freedom was passed on to the children of those workers.

A Communist party was organized in Czechoslovakia in 1948 and a Communist government installed in 1953. In that same year, the 100-korun note with the original version of Liberty was replaced with a design that conveyed the expected "worker" message.

There is no plan to restore the liberty cap to the figure on the State Printing Works for Securities in Prague. It remains in its altered state—a statement and reminder of an ugly period in the history of the Czech and Slovak people.

After the German invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1939, engraver Jindra Schmidt was ordered to reengrave the female figure to be featured on a 50-korun note of the puppet state of Bohemia and Moravia to remove all traces of the liberty cap (top). After the liberation of Czechoslovakia, a 100-korun note was issued showing the original version.

When the State Printing Works for Securities in Prague was opened in 1928, the central figure gracing its façade was an image of Liberty wearing a liberty cap (right). The symbolic cap was laboriously removed during the period of German occupation in World War II. •

Numismatic Gleanings from the Nation's Oldest Dump

LONG BEFORE THE high winds and waters of last August, long before the establishment of the Presidential vacation retreat gave media prominence to this coastal village, and long before Congress turned to modern commemoratives as substitutes for government money to fund war memorials or refurbish White House paintings, Kennebunkport, Maine, gave consideration to a numismatic issue of its own.

In 1976, coincident with the forthcoming observance of the Bicentennial of American Independence, Kennebunkport celebrated the "200th Anniversary of Independent Dumping"!

To help underwrite this auspicious anniversary, Kennebunkport turned to the same means later discovered by Congress as the panacea to fund ailing public projects. A year earlier, through the sponsorship of the Kennebunkport Dump Association (KDA), a specially packaged, serially numbered, 2-inch, bronze commemorative medal was authorized. Production was to be limited to 1,000 examples; the dies were to be destroyed after minting.

Artwork depicting the obverse of the official dump medal featured the picturesque Kennebunkport Dump with appropriate lettering: ★1776 BICEN-Kennebunkport's "Dump Credit Card" is good nationwide, making it unnecessary to toss trash by the roadside. A medal authorized by the Kennebunkport Dump Association (KDA) is believed to be the only one ever issued to mark the bicentennial of an American dump.

Release of the medal was planned to coincide with the 1975 observance of National Dump Week, which in Kennebunkport began on the Fourth of July and ran through Labor Day. The season-long "week" featured a dump-art exhibit, a "Miss Dumpy" charge cards—dump credit cards were distributed. The credit card entitled the holder to visit any dump in the country instead of using the roadside.

Even in 1976, Dump Week was not created for the sole purpose of issuing a medal. By the time of the American Bicentennial celebration, Dump Week already had been on the calendars of major events for several years. In 1968, for example, Dump Week was featured in National Geographic magazine. A reporter for The New York Times visited Kennebunkport and picked a few items to feature in a story published in the June 16, 1968, edition.

Although the Kennebunkport Dump celebrated its 200th anniversary in 1976, the colonial village dates to 1653. "For the first 123 years, citizens were either too poor to throw anything away or were in the dumping business themselves," wrote Edward Mayo, KDA bicentennial president.

KDA is a nonprofit organization incorporated under the laws of the State of Maine to promote interest in dumps. Its 40 members include a president and 39 executive vice presidents. Their lighthearted activities emphasize, in an oblique manner, that rubbish and litter belong in dumps and not in backyards or along the roadside. For their efforts, these dumpsters have won numerous awards, including the National Trash Pile Trophy and citations from "Keep Maine Scenic" and "Keep America Beautiful." They are dedicated to the premise that a society that lives by its obsolescence need not necessarily perish of its own junk.

Although artwork has been found, and copies of pre-strike announcements (complete with pricing information—$8.50 each, postpaid) are on file, no one in Kennebunkport can, or will, admit to the actual issuance of the medal commemorating the auspicious bicentennial. After all, the coastal village has risen to higher planes—perhaps for another four years, it will remain the vacation retreat of the President.

Understandably, the White House has refused to comment, confirm or deny that the Bush family junk is commingled with common trash in the Kennebunkport Dump. To so admit might be cause for an unusual credit card, and possibly a medal, to be added to collections of presidential memorabilia—items considered by some to be beneath the dignity of the office. •

Good News—Bad News

THERE IS A noticeable change in the material being offered for sale by the promoters of high-priced coins. A year or so ago they were using Morgan dollars almost exclusively in their investment-oriented ads. Before that, there were gold bullion deals, and then silver rounds. All of these schemes were directed at people outside the hobby, and most of them stressed the profit potential of coins.

Now the thrust of these ads has been switched from investing to pride of ownership and the joy of collecting. The coins offered most often are common 20th-century type pieces, proof sets or mint sets. Some of the sets are made up of worn coins, others are government-packaged sets. The quality and price of most of the offerings are as questionable as the circulated

Morgan dollars that used to be touted.

The new trend is significant. People are no longer turned on by the promise of quick profits from rare coins. Some have been educated by what they have heard or read about overgraded or overpriced coins. Others are graduates of the school of hard knocks.

It is interesting to observe that the general public often is just as savvy about coins as the numismatic community. They just aren't quite as cautious or informed about how to shop for coins.

It's good to see this trend away from thinking of coins only as an investment. It seems desirable to tell new coin buyers about the other benefits and pleasures of collecting. But is this the good news, or the bad news that goes with the change? What will happen to those new collectors when they discover that they have paid much too much for their coins? Will they go on to learn more about the hobby and to enjoy it the way we do? Or will they think we are all a bunch of crooks, and turn away from numismatics?

Here are some examples of current offerings that will either make or break some potential new collectors. One is the "World War II Lincoln Penny Collection," a set of nine circulated cents, 1943 to 1945, for $12.95. Then there is the set of 27 "Genuine U.S. Mint Coins of the 20th Century." It sells for $149.90. The older pieces are all well worn, but some of them, the ad says, are "all-but-extinct." Their real value is about $50 to $60.

Another ad that is appearing all around the country promotes three parts of "The American Silver Collector's Series." The "Yesteryear" collection has Barber coins, a Liberty nickel and an Indian Head cent. The "Vanishing Classics" collection contains a Walking Liberty half dollar, a Standing Liberty quarter, a Buffalo nickel, a Mercury dime and a steel cent. The "Presidents" collection includes one each of our current coin designs from the pre-1965 era. Each of these collections is priced at $29.95 plus $3.50 postage.

Time will tell whether these offerings are doing the hobby more good than harm. Surely the coins are going to people that might never begin collecting without this kind of stimulation. Some of them will become knowledgeable collectors, but I worry about the others. How can we encourage them to attend coin club meetings or pick up trade publications?

I was a bit unnerved when two readers told me they had been taken in by an official-sounding notice they received from the Office of Sweepstakes Administration. Everything was so clear in the notification that it seemed impossible for them to lose. They were told that they were winners in a sweepstakes and only had to call to find out how much cash they had won. No strings attached. Just make one call!

"Mike" just couldn't resist, even though a 900 number was given. The notice said the call would cost only $6.90 and he definitely would receive a valuable cash award. So he called, not hoping for the $14,000 grand prize, but assured that he would get some cash by return mail. This did not seem like the pesty letters we all get telling us we are winners of some prize or other. This one promised cash.

Mike called and actually did win a cash prize—a Mercury dime! He was assured that it was a collector's item and worth much more than face value. Then the firm tried to sell him a bez-

Did you know that scam coin promotions have now moved across the border to Canada? I suppose it had to happen sooner or later, but I was a bit surprised to see this advertisement and how much it looked like ads run in this country.

The coins offered for sale are called the "Canadian Sovereign Penny Collection." I guess it is okay to call Canadian cents "pennies," the same as in this country. The collection consists of five 1-cent pieces, each with the effigy of a different monarch, from Victoria to Elizabeth. Two of them are the old, large-size coins, and the most recent are the current, small size. The set is packaged in a cardboard holder printed in two colors.

While it may not be "a piece of Canadian history you'll want to pass on to your children and grandchildren," it is a nice-looking array. One of the coins, they say, could be over a hundred years old. There is no reason why it shouldn't be. The early Victoria cents have a catalog value of only about $2 in Fine condition. You wouldn't know that, however, from the cost of these sets. They are priced at $28.70.

Charging nearly 10 times the normal numismatic value for these coins seems outrageous to me. There may be nothing illegal about it, but this is the kind of advertising we must all try to stop by educating the public. Sorry, Canadian friends, but I guess this had to happen eventually.

Their motives for engaging in the hobby, however, were slightly different. To some degree, their participation imitated the pursuits of the wealthy. But, they also were influenced by dealers who advised that a profit could be made by collecting coins. For some, the desire to collect took on great importance. Filling all the holes in a penny board became as meaningful as wealth and status enhancement.

This fundamental change in the hobby broadened the collector base and created a tiered market. The wealthy, informed collector was still the primary market for major dealers. However, money could also be made by selling volumes of lower-priced items to this new group of collectors that was, as Veblen would view it, imitating the upper class in their quest of this leisure activity. Like any good capitalist, the dealer was attempting to expand his market.

What followed was the next step in the evolution of numismatics from a leisure/hobby activity to an "investment opportunity with outstanding growth potential." For example, consider the numismatic market in the early to mid 1960s. Rolls of current-date, uncirculated coins were touted as the investment of the future, a promotion that was designed to ensure the growth of the hobby and the market. Future hobbyists, like us, would desire high-grade coins for their collections. Where would they get these specimens? Why, they would be purchased from those who had the foresight to put away a few rolls!

Historically, this has always been the case. We certainly cannot collect what was not saved by previous generations. However, this particular promotion was flawed in that supply simply overwhelmed demand; the market still is trying to absorb the glut of '60s rolls.

Essentially the same thing occurred in the late 1930s with the overabundance of commemorative coins. Those who purchased gem material at the time have since made good profits. But, 40 to 50 years is a long time to wait to cash in, and the profits were limited to those individuals who bought the best items.

If we accept Veblen's theories, the explanation for these events becomes apparent. Part of the value and collectability of a numismatic item comes from its limited supply. The rarer the item, the more significant it becomes as a display of wealth. It achieves the status of a conspicuous consumable and lends status to the owner. With the purchase of a very rare item, the new owner becomes part of numismatic history.

In reality, we are talking about two primary human desires—the desire for recognition and status among one's peers and the desire for immortality. Both can be obtained through the purchase of a rare numismatic item.

This brings us to the current situation in the hobby. The dealer needs an expanding marketplace; the conspicuous consumer needs to satisfy his desire for status. Enter third-party grading services, computer grading and the numismatic investment fund.

The consumer, via third-party grading, can be assured that he owns something few others can hope to have ("only three graded higher," "finest known specimen," etc.). Through the use of these grading services, the dealer has expanded the number of "rare and desirable" items available for sale. Both collector and dealer rely on numeric grades as an indication of the condition of a coin.

The term "condition rarity" since has become a standard in the industry. What was a common item, such as a Morgan dollar, has become a rarity by virtue of its condition. How do we know a coin is rare? By the value it commands. How do we know it is valuable? Because none are graded higher. We are pandering to human emotion, not historical significance or scholarly advancement.

Currently, the numismatic market is tiered and pyramidal, and the number of tiers appears to be increasing. At the top of the pyramid are those collectors who can afford the 1804 silver dollars, 1913 Liberty Head nickels, 1894-S dimes, etc. These are Veblen's true leisure class of conspicuous consumers, competing among themselves for the largest, the most expensive, the best of whatever is deemed to promote one's status and success.

Next on the pyramid is a larger, but still somewhat selective group of individuals who collect coins based on condition rarity. Such people desire the status of rarity, but cannot afford or cannot locate items that are rare in and of themselves. This group includes several sub-groups that are divided according to their ability to play the game (such as those who can afford MS-68s, those who can afford MS-65s, etc.). These individuals also are conspicuous consumers and members of the leisure class, but at a lower status level.

Investors occupy the next tier of the pyramid, which again can be subdivided based on the amount of money available and the material sought. Members of this group aspire to conspicuous consumer status, hoping to arrive by making money. (What is not perceived is that the truly desirable status items already have been consumed by those at the top of the pyramid.) Their success depends on expanding the market for the commodity, a philosophy sometimes referred to as the "bigger fool" principle. Junk bonds and pyramid schemes are examples of this false road to riches, where the few who hop on the investment bandwagon early make money and the crowd that follows pays the clean-up expenses.

Finally, at the base of the pyramid is the general body of collectors who, through their diversity, support and provide a base for all numismatic collectibles. This group also seeks status and recognition through leisure activity, but by a different means than the conspicuous consumer. They derive status by attending coin club meetings, solving numismatic riddles, exhibiting at conventions, publishing articles, etc. Although profit may be a concern, it is not the desire for profit that draws these individuals to the hobby and keeps them involved.

What does this mean for the future of numismatics? I believe we will continue to see an increase in the number of items that are defined as rare and desirable, a result of man's enduring need for status. The investor group will continue to seek wealth and, to some degree, to invest in numismatically related items. As always, their success will depend on the whims of the marketplace.

To a large degree, market cycles will be influenced by the movement of investors into and out of the coin market. Those who buy low and sell high will prosper; those who do not, will not. The successful investor will obtain information regarding a potential purchase before separating himself from his money.

Concerning numismatic investments, the following rules should always apply:

- 1) Invest only disposable income,

■ Paper money expert Gene Hessler, author of The Numismatist column "Notes on Paper," has completed the fifth edition of his award-winning reference The Comprehensive Catalog of U.S. Paper Money (ANA Library Cat. No. US40.H4 1992). The most apparent change to this edition is full-color illustrations of production work at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The most important change, however, is the addition of listings for Federal Treasury notes prior to 1866, some as early as 1812. No other catalog has recognized these historically important notes.

Serial numbers of known examples of rare notes are listed for the first time. Revised prices in three conditions are given for most issues. An extensive bibliography is helpful for the casual reader as well as the serious student. Available in softcover ($29.95) or hardcover (39.95), Comprehensive Catalog of U.S. Paper Money is published by BNR Press, 132 E. Second St., Port Clinton, OH 43452-1115.

■ The fascinating saga of American coinage is presented in Collectible American Coins (ANA Library Cat. The year was 1905 and President Theodore Roosevelt asked the noted sculptor and his personal friend, Augustus Saint-Gaudens, to redesign our nation's coinage based on the model of the sculptured high relief designs of the ancient Greeks. Inspired by the ancient muses, Saint-Gaudens created what many consider the most beautiful and artistic coin in the history of U.S. coinage -- the 1907, Roman Numerals, high relief $20.00 gold coin. The coinage of the ancient Greeks, that inspired Saint-Gaudens, as well as the subsequent coinage of the Roman and Byzantine empires comprise one of the most popular collecting pastimes known throughout the world.

Both affordable and educational, collecting classical coinage is an easy avocation to pursue and Classical Numismatic Group is in its 16th year of serving the collector in this fascinating field. If you, like Roosevelt and Saint-Gaudens, are inspired by ancient coinage, then let us introduce you to its pleasures with our fully illustrated and detailed catalogues.

WE WOULD LIKE TO PURCHASE YOUR ANCIENT COINS

We are aware that many of the readers of The Numismatist own ancient coins. It goes along with the type of person who is a member of the ANA. Some of you have purchased your ancients decades ago, and some of you have purchased them recently. Some of you are actively collecting, while others have lost interest or are unwilling to pay the current market prices. In fact, some of you may have inherited your ancient coins and have no real idea of what you own or what they are worth.

My company is one of the largest firms in the United States that deals in ancient coins.

We specialize in ancient coins, we are knowledgeable about ancient coins, we keep track of the current market worldwide, and over the past years, we have purchased millions of dollars of ancient coins.

We particularly NEED TO BUY: Roman gold, Greek gold, Egyptian gold, Greek silver (particularly the larger denominations), Roman silver, and Roman large bronzes (particularly the coins of the 12 Caesars).

We will buy ENTIRE COLLECTIONS, ESTATES, HOLDINGS, ACCUMULATIONS.

We can PAY by company cheque, bank cheque, cash, or in any currency openly traded in the free world.

If your preference is to sell your ancient coins at auction, we will act as your agent and can arrange a name sale, or retain your anonymity—whichever you prefer.

WE CAN ASSURE YOU OF BEING COMPLETELY DISCREET AND WE OFFER YOU A FREE APPRAISAL OF YOUR ANCIENT COINS.

Bright Idea

To encourage junior members to take an active interest in the hobby and participate in club meetings, the Red Rose Coin Club of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, has collected a bag full of coins, tokens and medals (donated by members and dealers). A junior member selects an item from the bag, researches it, and draws the obverse and reverse. Then he/she presents a 3- to 5-minute talk on the piece at the next meeting; the numismatic item is theirs to keep.

A "Meeting Minutes Worksheet" developed by the Roxborough Coin Club of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, allows the club secretary to take an occasional month off, participate in club auctions, and mingle with members and guests. The worksheet features spaces for meeting date, time and theme, synopsis of committee reports, old and new business, and names of prize-winners. A volunteer secretary merely fills in the blanks and the report is complete . . .

BRONZES OF MITHRADATES VI OF PONTUS

Mithradates VI Eupator Dionysos (120-63 B.C.), king of Pontus on the southern shore of the Black Sea, was the last Hellenistic king to be wholly independent of Rome. At the height of his power, he ruled an empire that extended from the Crimea to the north, to Byzantium to the southwest, Colchis to the southeast, and Cappadocia to the south. Regarding Mithradates as a threat to her authority in the East, Rome fought three bitter wars (89-85 B.C., 83-82 B.C., and 74-63 B.C.) to subdue this proud monarch, who committed suicide rather than submit to Roman authority. The most infamous example of the savagery of these wars occurred in 88 B.C. In an effort to totally eradicate Roman influence in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), Mithradates ordered the slaughter of all Romans and Italians and their families in the cities under his control. Known as the "Asian Vespers," the massacre claimed between 80,000 and 150,000 people according to ancient sources.

Mithradates, whose family origins can be traced to Persian nobility, claimed descent from Darius I of Persia and from Alexander the Great and Seleucus I. By claiming this dual descent, Mithradates presented himself to his Asiatic subjects as the eastern king foretold in prophecies who would drive out the invaders from the West (i.e. the Romans), and to his Greek subjects as the champion of hellenism against the Roman barbarians. Portraits of the king depicted him as the new Alexander.

Bronze coins issued by the cities under Mithradates' control bore the themes of the king's propaganda. The hero Perseus figures prominently on this coinage. Perseus, slayer of the Gorgon Medusa, was claimed as an ancestor both by Alexander the Great and by the kings of Persia. Ares, the Greek god of war also appears on the bronzes, as does Nike, goddess of Victory. The appearance of these two divinities from the Greek pantheon on the coinage of Mithradates was especially appropriate to a king whose lifetime was largely spent waging war in the pursuit of victory over the Romans. Thus, these bronzes symbolized Mithradates links to the Greek and Persian worlds and his attempt to be a bridge between those two worlds.

Due to a recent purchase, we are able to offer two major types of these interesting bronzes. These types were struck at a number of cities in the kingdom, such as the port of Amisus on the southern shore of the Black Sea.

The Bebees' generosity and interest in numismatics, expressed in part through their numerous donations to the ANA, were recognized with the Farran Zerbe Memorial Award for distinguished service.

The 1913 Liberty Head nickel (one of five known), the rare Class III 1804 Bust dollar (valued at $1 million), a $5 National Bank note issued by the First National Bank of Ketchum, Idaho Territory, and an 1854 Kellogg & Co. $20 gold piece are among the spectacular numismatic treasures donated by the Bebees to the ANA Money Museum. ANA President Edward C. Rochette expressed the feelings of all hobbyists when he noted that the Bebees' gifts "will be exhibited, appreciated and studied for years to come."

Even more limited in emission is the variety of the 1837 8 reales with assayer's initials B.A, but with the edge inscription DIOS PROTEGE EL ESTADO in relief as on the 8 escudos described above. Only five examples of this coin currently are known. The monetary law, of course, called for the edge inscription to be in relief, as it is on this variety. It seems most likely that this variety was the one initially produced. The edge inscription on all other varieties of silver coins having such lettering is incuse, and the gold 8 escudos of late 1837 and 1838 conform to this practice. The reason for the change is not known, but it is probable that it was dictated by practical difficulties in producing coins with an inscription in relief in large quantities. This coin had five stars on the obverse, so it was made after the 8 escudos and half real.

These coins were followed later in the year by varieties with the term CONFEDERACION and the assayer's initials B.A or a scarcer variety with the initials M.S (Manuel Saldivar). Why Saldivar's initials were used is an unresolved question, for he apparently was the treasurer of the mint at this time.

The 2 reales was the only other known denomination issued in Cuzco in 1837. While the obverse has the same design as the coins struck late in that year, the reverse has the designation 2 REALES, with the assayer's initials B.A. constituting still another variation from the originally prescribed design.

The only coin in this series produced at the Arequipa mint in 1837 was the half real. The denomination $\frac{1}{2}$ REAL is given on the reverse, surrounded by a wreath as required by the decree, while the obverse carries the new coat of arms with five stars surrounded by the legend REPUB SUD PERUANA AREQ 1837. Thus, this coin was produced subsequently to the half real of Cuzco. (It should be noted that a similar coin dated 1838 is in the collection of the Banco Central de Reserva del Peru in Lima. I have seen the piece, but have not been able to examine it in detail. No other specimen is known. Available coinage records of the Arequipa mint do not show that such coins were made in 1838.)

made possible increased production. A Supreme Order of March 13 stipulated that only pesos be minted at Arequipa, but apparently Santa Cruz, for reasons to be discussed later, temporarily allowed the production of 2- and 4-real coins as well.

The first peso, struck on April 9, was "equal in weight and fineness to that of the Spanish and as well made as any of those of the Confederation." The 4- and 8-real coins bore the assayer's initials M.V (Mariano Valdez y Hurtado). The 1838 4 reales of Arequipa was the only coin of this denomination in this series. In contrast to the earlier 2 reales struck at Cuzco, the 2 reales made at Arequipa did not bear the assayer's initials.

The only silver surface coins struck at Cuzco with the date 1838 were the 8 reales bearing the initials B.A and M.S. Bernardo Aguilar became the junior or second assayer at the Lima mint in April 1838, so that while the use of the assayer's initials M.S. on the coins of 1838 is readily understandable, the reason for the use of those initials on the 8 reales of 1837 is not. Saldivar's initials also appeared on the half-, 1- and 8-escudo gold coins that surfaced that year. A record of mintage at Cuzco for 1838, which survives in the departmental archives in that city, shows that these gold coins were made only in very small numbers. A total of about 5,330 gold pesos was coined on April 6 and August 31, while on December 28, a little more than 198 marks (a mark weighs 230.0465g) of gold was converted to more gold pesos and the half- and 1-escudo coins.

The final surface coins were struck early in 1839, presumably before the defeat of Santa Cruz at the battle of Yungay on January 20, 1839, and the ensuing revolutions at Arequipa and Cuzco. The Cuzco coin is considered very scarce, while the Arequipa coin is very rare.

A major variety of the 8 reales is created by the use of either 14 or 16 rays emanating from the surface. The varying number of rays are readily seen and can be found on both the FEDERACION and CONFEDERACION coins with both sets of assayer's initials.

On the coins commonly available, the edge inscription DIOS PROTEGE EL ESTADO is incuse, and the lettering, as viewed from the obverse, appears to be upright on some coins and

Slabs Good for Storage

A GAIN I WILL answer some questions from readers regarding coin storage and preservation. Response to the new column format has been excellent; keep those questions coming!

Q. How do you regard slabs as a vehicle for coin storage? In other words, if I have some valuable raw coins, would it make sense to get them slabbed just for storage purposes? Are [some] slabs better than others for storage purposes? Should coins in the old PCGS slabs be re-slabbed, and are the new slabs better for storage?

—J.T., Connecticut

A. While attending coin shows on behalf of ANACS, I am often asked these and similar questions. Slabbing is something of an innovation in coin storage and preservation, and many coins are now "enjoying" protection and security that they never would have had without the grading services.

Slabbing is a great way to store your more expensive pieces, and it would make sense to get your coins slabbed for storage purposes only, as long as you can live with the fairly bulky holder. ANACS, NGC and PCGS slabs are made of inert plastic that will not harm your coins, and they are sonically sealed, which effectively cuts off most air exchange between the inside of the holder and the atmosphere. A slab from any of the above grading services should work just fine.

However, just because a coin is in a slab does not mean you can forget about it! Use standard, common-sense environmental precautions—low humidity, moderate temperatures—when selecting a place to store your slabs, and check on them from time to time. I know of a gentleman who stored his coins—all slabbed—in a basement safe.

The basement flooded, and he waited a week or so to check on his coins because he assumed the holders were waterproof. Alas, they were not. It was very fortunate that none of his coins was seriously harmed.

As far as the old PCGS slabs go, they are probably fine for storage. Many coins tend to rattle around in them, although I have not yet seen a coin that was damaged because of this. I do like the new slab better because it appears to be more airtight and it employs a plastic ring that grips the coin along its entire edge (similar to ANACS and NGC slabs) rather than hard-plastic pressure points.

The cost of re-slabbing PCGS coins that are now in the old holders is scheduled to increase from $3 to $5. Unless you want all your coins to be in the new holders or the idea of your coins rattling around in the old holders makes you uncomfortable, I would recommend leaving them in the old holders.

Q. I store my coins in one of those albums with the sliding plastic sleeves. I am careful when inserting and removing them to keep the plastic slides from rubbing against the coins' surfaces; no problem here. However, the manufacturer claims the slides are made of an inert plastic called Kodar. I have noticed no problems, but is this plastic truly inert? Also, I like the hard-plastic, snap-together, 2 x 2-inch holders. Is there any problem with keeping my coins in them for a long time?

A. As far as I know, "Kodar" is made of the same sort of plastic as mylar, so you should not have a problem with the chemical composition of your album's slides. However, do continue to be careful when inserting and removing coins!

I have stored a number of coins for quite a few years with no ill effects in the 2 x 2-inch holders you mention. As long as the holder snugly fits the coin, you should have no problem. The holders cost about 25 cents each when I last checked, so they offer a very affordable way to store coins.

Fabricated 1926-S Buffalo Nickel Surfaces

THIS MONTH'S COLUMN offers a new twist on an old theme. A familiar method of altering coins is to join an obverse and reverse from two different, common specimens to form a piece with a rare date and/or mintmark. This technique frequently is used to replicate the valuable 1916-D dime.

Generally, alterations produced in this fashion are rather crude, especially 5-cent pieces. However, the 1926-S "split" nickel recently examined by the ANA Authentication Bureau (ANAAB) is a remarkable fake. The coin displays an unnatural color and a finish similar to a polished coin, but overall is quite passable.

Whenever a better-date, mintmarked Buffalo nickel is submitted for authentication, ANAAB checks the mintmark for signs of solder, glue or a seam, indications that a mintmark has been added. The edge of the coin also is checked for telltale signs of an "embossed" mintmark. In this process, a hole is drilled into the coin's edge at the mintmark position. Then, using a tool that likely resembles needle-nosed pliers, with a mintmark on the inside of one jaw and a piece of plastic or hard leather on the inside of the other, the jaw with the mintmark is pushed into the hole and the handles squeezed, applying the pressure needed to raise the mintmark on the surface of the coin. (See the September 1981 issue of The Numismatist, p. 2436.)

The edge of this piece looked very normal, with light, vertical scrapes, typical of the collar-ejection damage seen on many genuine coins. However, microscopic examination at 20x power revealed tiny pits consistent with the application of molten metal, and file marks were evident on the beveled portion of the edge. Further inspection also revealed that the coin had been plated. In several areas the plating had peeled away from the original surface.

At this point, the evidence pointed toward an embossed mintmark. But, a quick comparison with an "S" mintmark on a genuine 1926-S nickel gave us a match. Now we had a coin and mintmark that appeared genuine, with filing on the beveled edge, light edge pitting, and what appeared to be nickel electroplating.

If this coin had an embossed mintmark, why would it be filed only on the beveled portion of the edge instead of on the edge nearest the mintmark? Perhaps a different metal was added to conceal the void created by the embossing process. If so, the weight of the coin should differ from that of an authentic specimen.

A check revealed its weight to be 5.424g, versus the standard weight of 5.000g—a critical error for the alterer. U.S. nickel weights cling tightly to the 5.000g specification; a difference of nearly 9 percent is too great for normal tolerances, even with an embossed mintmark.

Based on this finding, an embossed mintmark is unlikely. The only other logical conclusion is that the obverse of a 1926 nickel was joined with a common S-mint reverse using a solder or lead bond. This bonding material accounts for the extra weight. With its expertly finished edge and nickel plating covering the seam, this 1926-S nickel is truly a deceptive alteration. •

Note the file marks between the edge and rim, evidence that the two sides were joined together.

To the left of the buffalo's hind legs, the nickel plating has begun to peel.

upside-down on others. Two varieties of each of the 4 and 8 reales have been reported, with the exception of the Arequipa 8 reales of 1838, which does not depict a human face at the center of the sun. Perhaps because of its rarity, only the "upright" variety of this coin is presently known.

Debasement

I HAVE MENTIONED the debased coins of Cuzco, which apparently were first made only a little over a month after the invasion of Peru by the Bolivians. The debasement of the coins of this period in Peruvian history is discussed in some detail in "Moneda Feble in Peru, 1830-1867," an article in The Coinage of El Perú. In particular, all of the silver surface coins (with the exception of the 8 reales) were debased, having a fineness of only 9 dineros (0.667 fine) instead of the 10 dineros 20 grains (0.903 fine) stipulated by prior Peruvian laws. For the first time, the fineness is inscribed on a Peruvian coin—the 8 reales—although this was not prescribed in the monetary law. Undoubtedly, this was done to assure the foreign merchants in South Peru of the value of the pesos, although the general public was unaware of the debasement that had occurred in the minor coinage.

The surface coins of 1837-39 are the most beautiful series of coins produced in Peru. Because few contemporary records have survived this turbulent period, researching the history of these pieces is difficult, but challenging. •

BY BOB MERRILL

A Numismatic Prophet

It was February of 1979, a time when coins were still inexpensive. An old 2-cent postcard, with an adequate number of stamps affixed, arrived at our office on Greenville Avenue bearing a cryptic message: "Same location for sixty-six years, have owned almost every coin in the Red Book; many more than once. Now [it] is time to auction. If interested, call me . . ."

So began my relationship with the gentleman our company refers to as Tecumseh. Why Tecumseh? Why not? After all, Tecumseh and the subject of this article both lived in the same part of Ohio. As a young boy, our modern Tecumseh found many an arrowhead along Wolf Creek where the Indian chieftain used to camp. Long before the road that runs in front of our present-day Tecumseh's farm was paved, the original trail was laid out by his namesake. It was only natural that Chief Tecumseh became the boy's hero.

During the War of 1812, Tecumseh and his lieutenant, The Prophet, created havoc for U.S. forces. At the Battle of the Thames, Tecumseh was killed, allegedly by one Colonel Richard M. Johnson of Kentucky, who seized his moment of notoriety to mumble, "Rumsey, Dumsey, Colonel Johnson killed Tecumseh." During his successful quest for the vice presidency in 1837, Johnson used the phrase as his campaign slogan. (Seems like politicians were as qualified then as they are now.)

Tecumseh (the modern one) must have had a vision of sorts, because even though he consigned a third of his collection in February 1979, he did not want his coins sold until December of that year. This turned out to be a most prudent decision, for that summer marked the beginning of a phenomenal bull market. By the time we sold his coins, the prices were more than double what we expected to receive when they were consigned. Remember, this was when the hostages were in Iran, interest rates were more than 20 percent, gold cleared $800 an ounce, silver approached $50, and inflation was rampant. Is it any wonder that the value of the coins increased? (I recall that not one consignor complained about the prices realized in that sale.)

Most of Tecumseh's coins were Extremely Fine (EF) to Uncirculated and included an excellent representation of early issues. He began collecting as far back as 1940 and had sought out rarities like the 1794 dollar. Coins were more available then, but one had to have a dose ofchutzpah to buy them. Prices may have been cheap, but collectors were scarcer than the coins.

Our consignor spent some $30,000 of the proceeds refurbishing his farmhouse, and then locked up the rest

(which was well over six figures) in certificates of deposit. (Good thing he didn't live in Texas, as most of the state's financial institutions would become frozen yogurt shops later on.)

Between 1979 and 1988, Tecumseh and I stayed in close contact. Periodically I would visit and listen to stories about Thomas Elder and others from whom he had purchased coins. In mid 1988, Tecumseh informed me that he wanted to sell another third of his collection the following spring. This, as you will recall, was the period in which investment funds were first established. Coin prices were rising rapidly to meet the anticipated demand. June 1989 was very close to the top of the cycle, and this was the auction Tecumseh had chosen.

His properties again were well received, as their rarity and condition were the same as that of his first consignment 10 years before. This time, Tecumseh used the profits to expand his farm, which, as you might expect, has paid off handsomely.

Now to the present. Back in March of this year, Tecumseh called and told me that he wanted to sell the last portion of his collection at the upcoming ANA auction in Orlando. Based on his past financial decisions, I've got to think that this sale will be something else. After all, the man seems to have a knack for good timing.

Oh, yes . . . "same location for sixty-six years" can now be changed to "same location for seventy-nine years," for Tecumseh still lives in the house in which he was born. •

Bob Merrill has served as auction director for Heritage Numismatic Auctions in Dallas, Texas, since 1976. Previously, he taught history at a Dallas junior college. Heritage, selected as the official auctioneer for ANA anniversary convention sales through 1995, has conducted more ANA auctions since 1980 than all other firms combined.

Tecumseh and Tecumseh.

Colorado Memorabilia

Since 1982, the Museum of the American Numismatic Association has featured a unique "Colorado Gallery" of numismatic items, gold ore and nuggets, mining and assaying equipment and related materials, as well as historic photographs in a backdrop panel. For visitors, these colorful mementos of the Old West offer a perspective on the great importance of the Centennial State in the development of our national coinage and economy.

Until recently, most of the specimens on exhibit in this gallery have been on loan—some from the Denver Mint and some from private collections. Many of the most important of these were a part of the Colorado collection formed by our late, beloved ANA treasurer, William C. Henderson, who worked with me on the development of the gallery. He would have been delighted to know that his widow, Catherine B. Henderson, has generously donated these pieces to the ANA Museum's cabinet to be enjoyed by all those visitors who share his fascination with history and numismatics.

Some specimens in the Henderson Colorado collection relate to the establishment of the United States Mint in Denver—one of the most significant numismatic events for the state and for the country. These pieces include representative examples of each of the denominations—the dime, quarter, half dollar, half eagle, eagle and double eagle—struck in 1906, the first year of operations. In addition to these early D-mint issues, the collection features an example of the commemorative medal struck in 1905 to celebrate the founding of the mint. This scarce copper piece was of essentially the same dimensions as the $20 gold piece soon to emanate from the same presses.

A 1905 uniface, copper medal (top) celebrates the founding of the Denver Mint (ANA Museum Accession No. 1991.84.7); it weighs 17.229g and has a diameter of 34.2mm. A 1906-D $20 piece (ANA Museum Accession No. 1991.84.6), struck in the first year of production at the new Denver Mint, weighs 33.425g and has a diameter of 34.3mm.

Highlighted here are the Denver Mint's 1905 commemorative medal (No. 876 in So-Called Dollars by Harold E. Hibler and Charles V. Kappen, [ANA Library Catalog Number RM30.H5]) and a 1906-D gold double eagle presented by Mrs. Henderson. Both of these handsome pieces are in mint state. •

The Internal Revenue Service has formally determined that the American Numismatic Association is a tax-exempt organization under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. Hedge for inflation!! Survival package for the 90's. Silver may be one of the world's most under-valued commodities. Today, one ounce is worth about $4.00. That's over 90% less than its high in 1980. Did you know that a major NY exchange once traded a silver coin contract? Silver is one of the most prestigiously recognized hedges for inflation. Recovery is inevitable and inflation will follow. Don't get caught without your silver and gold coins. To receive a free sample of a 90% silver coin, sales, remember to save the holders or albums. Keep old albums, along with hobby newspapers, magazines, and a few foreign coins, to share with junior collectors.

You might think about holding a special holiday sale. This will require planning well in advance. I have found that reasonably priced coin jewelry, common silver dollars in nice holders, 20th-century type sets and proof sets are good items for holiday sales.

The Importance of Appraisals

ANOTHER AREA OF consideration is appraisals. Free appraisals should be just that—free. Many dealers charge for this service, which is understandable when they must examine a large collection or an estate that may take days to accomplish. I am talking here about small collections or a few coins that someone asks your advice about. Take time to be kind and considerate. If you treat people in this manner, they will remember you. Wouldn't you rather sell your coins to someone who appeared to be interested, honest and fair and took the time to go into detail with you? This is where giving free appraisals pays off.

To sum up, I would like to pass along some advice from part-time dealers Bob and Patti Bandi of P.B. Silver Coins in Rancho Cordova, California. You should experience this couple's enthusiasm for collecting! They truly enjoy and love this great hobby and the people they meet. Bob has been involved with coin collecting for 30 years, while his wife, Patti, has enjoyed the avocation for four years. (Bob is president of the Sacramento Valley Coin Club, and Patti serves as corresponding secretary.) They decided to become part-time coin dealers three years ago, and their goal is to become full-time dealers when Bob retires.

Listed here are the Bandis' 12 golden rules for aspiring coin dealers:

1) Whether buying or selling, be honest in all your dealings.

2) Build a numismatic library. Good reference material is an invaluable asset.

3) Learn something new every day.

4) Keep an open mind, but don't try to be an expert on everything.

5) Read everything you can, even if you don't agree with the author.

6) Expect to make mistakes. When you do, don't get discouraged. Be honest and face your mistakes squarely. Learn from them and try not to repeat them.

7) Be fair to everyone: your customers, your suppliers and yourself.

8) Give something back to the hobby. Take time to share your knowledge with others.

9) Don't expect to make money or break even for awhile. It takes time and effort to develop any business.

10) Don't be ashamed to take honest profits when they come. You earned them.

11) Respect, but do not be intimidated by other dealers.

12) Most of all, enjoy yourself!

I have found many benefits in dealing coins on a part-time basis. My business has helped me with college expenses. Not only have I earned a few dollars, but I also gained something more valuable—friendship and knowledge. •

A native Californian, Gregory Olin Whitney started coin collecting 28 years ago at the age of seven. After a near-fatal accident left him in a wheelchair, he found the perfect part-time employment as a coin dealer. His article "How to Cherrypick a Coin Dealer" appeared in the May 1992 issue.

Pop Quiz and a Wall Street Whiz

AS A PUBLIC service for knowledge-craving collectors unable to attend this month's Summer Conference at ANA headquarters in Colorado Springs, here is a brief quiz based on a few of the educational event's topics. (No cheating, please!)

Coinage of the Ancient World

- 1) Two of the finest-known decadrachms of Syracuse are located:
 - a. In the British Museum collection
 - b. On Harvey Stack's cufflinks

Early American Coppers

- 2) In only four years (1785-88), more than 400 different die varieties of Connecticut copper pieces were produced. Researchers think the primary reason for so much confusion is:
 - a. The dies were produced by the ANA Board
 - b. A Connecticut legislator believed that if the ridiculous proliferation of copper coins was successful, the U.S. Congress would someday adopt the same outrageous scheme for Olympic commemoratives

- c. Skip this question. No one more than 75 miles from Hartford actually cares much about Connecticut coppers

- 3) Which of the following is not a U.S. colonial coinage type?
 - a. Nova Constellatio
 - b. Nova Eborac
 - c. Nova, Chevy Two-Door

The Art of Engraving

- 4) True or false: Augustus Saint-Gaudens, delighted with the breathtaking beauty of his 1907 design for the $20 gold piece, pleaded with Congress to quickly approve the Susan B. Anthony dollar.

Counterfeit Detection

- 5) The best way to determine if a coin is counterfeit is:

- a. examine the coin's edge for a telltale seam
- b. examine the coin's field for tiny, telltale bubbles
- c. examine the coin's telltale invoice to see if it originally came from Big Al's House of Reproductions and Replicas

Determining Your Score

After completing this quiz, bring your answers to the next ANA Board meeting, where they will be discussed and debated repeatedly for hours before being sent to a committee for further consideration.

TO PROMOTE THE American Numismatic Association and collecting, it has been proposed that the ANA have a "corporate spokesperson" (you know, someone like Willard Scott or the fictional Poppin' Fresh doughboy). Here are several suggestions for attention-getting spokespeople.

Hire actress Barbara "I Dream of Jeannie" Eden. She could appear from the ANA lamp of knowledge and magically slab and unslab coins with just a blink of her eyes—with or without her navel exposed.

Now that he has plenty of spare time at federal taxpayers' expense, how about former Wall Street whiz Michael Milken as a spokesman for rare coins? Surely, he could make the transition from touting junk bonds to promoting junk coins.

My favorite choice for a numismatic spokesperson is a personality often seen running onto baseball fields: buxom Morgana, "The Kissing Bandit." For personal appearances on behalf of the ANA, Morgana could be appropriately costumed as an 1804 Bust dollar.

It All Began With Coins

The United States Mint Introduces The Smithsonian 150th Anniversary Commemorative Gold And Silver Coins

It all began when 104,960 British gold sovereigns arrived in America. A gift to our country from the estate of James Smithson, a Briton who never set foot in our land. Since British currency was not legal tender here, the United States Mint melted down the sovereigns and reminted them as Goddess of Liberty 10-Dollar Gold Coins. These coins helped finance the institution whose 150th Anniversary we celebrate today: the Smithsonian Institution.

Own the year's most eagerly awaited coins

Once again, the U.S. Mint is proud to offer a limited number of coins for the Smithsonian: 100,000 gold five-dollar and 650,000 silver dollar coins. The coins' designs are as memorable as the event itself. The reverse of the proof gold five-dollar coin, for example, features an exciting departure from most proof coins: The Smithsonian sunburst will be incused and mirror-finished, and the background frosted.

Help preserve James Smithson's living legacy

A portion of the proceeds from the sale of these coins will help the Smithsonian expand and enhance its collections. A percentage will go to the National Numismatic Collection for acquisitions, new displays and other improvements.

CURATOR'S CORNER

BY ROBERT W. HOGE

Clinton Inaugural Medal

As the ANA Museum's collection continues to grow rapidly in all areas of numismatics, it is a pleasure to receive new donations of important items directly from their manufacturers. A good case in point is the gift of an official 1993 presidential inaugural medal for William Jefferson Clinton, struck and donated by the Hoffman and Hoffman Mint of Carmel, California.

This handsome issue is part of a historic series that actually dates back to the time of George Washington. Most of the official presidential inaugural medals (1877 and later) were struck by the Philadelphia Mint, but in recent years private manufacturers frequently have been given the production assignment. Our specimen measures 70mm and is struck in bronze. Smaller silver and gold versions also were issued (see the March 1993 issue of The Numismatist, p. 308).

The inaugural medal's obverse and reverse designs were selected by President Clinton shortly after his election in 1992. Both sides are the work of Jesse Wallace Corsaut. The obverse of the medal portrays a strikingly realistic, three-quarter bust of Clinton, with the legend WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON above. The reverse features a beautiful American landscape of fields and mountains, with clouds above and a copse of trees to the right. The presidential seal is superimposed at the upper right, while the margin reads ★42ND PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA★, with the words INAUGURATED/JANUARY 20, 1993 below. The artist's name, CORSAUT, appears to the lower right of the trees.

The reverse design of the Clinton inaugural medal holds a special appeal for those who have visited the ANA's home and headquarters. The image was intended to call to mind the poem (and popular song) America the Beautiful by Katherine Lee Bates, which was composed in Colorado Springs after the author's memorable excursion to the top of nearby Pikes Peak. Thus, the "purple mountains' majesty," "amber waves of grain" and "fruited plain" shown on Clinton's inaugural medal may be construed as the ANA's own environs.

The medal's edge bears the inscription ©1993 P.I.C. HOFFMAN & HOFFMAN-CARMEL, CA-BRONZE-

HH. The piece is housed in an attractive, red box with a flocked insert and contains a walnut display stand, as well as a certificate of authenticity issued by the late Ronald H. Brown, chairman of the 1993 Presidential Inaugural Committee. •

The curator's chair is endowed by the Kenneth Keith Memorial Fund. Since the American Numismatic Association is a tax-exempt organization under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, all donations—both of cash and of material with established "fair market value"—qualify as charitable contributions for income tax purposes. Additional information can be obtained from the Museum of the American Numismatic Association, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279; fax 719/634-4085; or Internet anamus@money.org. Selected exhibits can be viewed on the ANA's World Wide Web site (<http://www.money.org>).

BY BOB MERRILL

Houdini and the Big House

Over the course of some 30 years in numismatics, I've met many collectors who have been kind enough to share their stories with me. I have always felt that it is people who make my job so fascinating.

Numismatics provides a commonality for people who otherwise would be totally removed from one another. It gives them a reference from which to form a bond. I've found most collectors to be generous with their personal lives. My current wife always tells me that I ask people too many questions about themselves. It isn't that I am prying, I'm just interested.

Recently I was in Nevada working with a very gracious gentleman who collected small cents. He had spent a lifetime in the gaming industry as a croupier and now was retired. He had become interested in coins as a means of relieving stress. Numismatics isn't a team sport, so he could relax in the solitude of his kitchen studying his coins, books and albums at his own pace.

Interestingly, this gentleman told me that if he had lived in a humid area, such as the Gulf Coast, he never would have collected Indians and Lincolns. "Copper is like lettuce, Bob. It has a shelf life. If you live in the South, you are asking it to turn green unless you are extremely careful."

I had never thought about environment influencing what a person collects, but this made a lot of sense, as far as cents were concerned, given the number of slimy, green discs that have marred my dainty hands over the years. Even the regular use of Oil of Olay® has not restored my dishpan hands to their prior beauty.

Another gentleman who regularly calls us lives in Appleton, Wisconsin. His last name is the same as that of the ex-Wisconsin senator who died from cirrhosis of the liver some 40 years ago, after looking in every American closet for communists. After years of talking on and off with this gentleman, I finally found enough nerve to ask him if he was related to Joe McCarthy. His answer? "Is there anyone in the U.S. who hasn't heard of that #@#!#? The guy was ubiquitous. But I am related to Harry Houdini, who lived in Appleton long before Tail Gunner Joe lived here. If I could press one of cousin Harry's magic buttons and become Alex Houdini, I'd do it." (Appropriately, this gentleman collects political memorabilia as well as coins, but nothing from the McCarthy era.)

Some years ago, I went to see an octogenarian on Maryland's eastern shore. Being confined to a wheelchair had not affected his personality one bit. He was a hilarious individual; I even wondered if maybe he had taken a gig in the Poconos years before. The man's residence was a virtual museum, filled with coins, stamps, pottery, canes, coin glass and Indian artifacts. After we transacted our business, he asked if I would like to see his first love—automobile license plates. Being the know-it-all that I am, I immediately envisioned a quaint, little box of perhaps 50 plates representing one product from each penitentiary. We entered a room with license plates hanging from every wall, with the theme from the old television show Route 66 playing in the background. This gentleman collected plates like you might collect Morgan dollars. For instance, he had an example of every year from Maryland, along with (branch mint?) specimens for trucks, police and government vehicles, and the like. His zealous pursuit extended to all 50 states, foreign countries that had long disappeared from the map, and countries like Togo that I didn't know had cars.

Just as numismatics has its trade publications, so does the license-plate hobby! A first-year-of-issue Maryland plate is like an S-VDB cent. And like coins, condition is everything. Interestingly, there are "doctors" in the license plate biz who repaint or straighten plates, remove rust and—check this out—alter dates. Could this mean that if I had a 1930 Texas plate that read "Texas Sesquicentennial," it might have a problem? Oh well, if these plate doctors ever have to go to the Big House, they will have already done their apprenticeship.

The old cliché that everyone collects something certainly applies. Now, there is a woman down the street from me with Texas Big Hair and a pink Cadillac who collects husbands. She is about . . . whoops, gotta go. •

- Issues a photo certificate with a registration number on genuine items.

- Provides additional information on membership services.

Authentication ⁺Plus

Fee for Authentication ⁺Plus $5.00 each additional evaluation question

Authentication ⁺Plus service provides evaluations not included in the standard certification process. Those submitting coins for certification can request additional data, including, but not limited to: rarity, value, weight, diameter, specific gravity, variety, surface characteristics, reflectivity, originality, type of counterfeit, reed count, and recommended references for further research. List item number and questions on a separate sheet.

ADMINISTRATIVE

- Please submit items in easy access holders. Mark holders with matching submission numbers.

- ANA will provide free insurance up to $1,000 per item valued under $5,000 (average). $5,000 worth of free insurance, will be provided for each item valued at $5,000 or more. Shipments valued higher are charged $1.00 per thousand dollars of additional valuation. (see worksheet). This insurance covers only the period in which an item is in ANA's possession. (See #7 under ANA's Liability.)

Authenticating the 1918/7-D Nickel

One of the more interesting overdates of the World War I era is the 1918/7-D Indian Head nickel. It is popularly believed that it was created by impressing a new 1917 die (bearing no mintmark) with a 1918-dated hub. However, most known specimens appear to have been struck from fairly well-eroded dies that display a die break at the Indian's braid. Very few represent an earlier die state that shows no break.

All 1918/7-D nickels were produced from only one pair of dies. The mintmark was handpunched on the reverse below the denomination. The piece is not known to have been counterfeited, although specimens with altered dates have been documented. In most cases, the area around the numeral 8 in the date on a 1918-D nickel is re-engraved to suggest an underlying numeral 7.

When authenticating this coin, one should focus on the date, the

Genuine 1918/7-D Indian Head nickel.

mintmark and the die break at the braid. On a genuine coin, the areas where the numerals of the date meet the fields should show no disruptions. If the coin exhibits machine doubling on its devices, each of the numerals should show doubling as well. Examine the lower opening of the 8 for signs of alteration.

The position of the mintmark on genuine 1918/7-D nickels is consistent. Mintmark placement on the 1918-D is similar, but not the same as the overdate.

On coins representing advanced die states, the die break at the braid extends to the Indian's mouth. Even on low-grade specimens, the break is almost always visible near the braid. However, be advised that the 1918-D Indian Head nickel is known to display a similar die break. If in doubt, contact the ANA Authentication Bureau. •

Genuine: Position of mintmark is consistent on all specimens.

Genuine: Areas where numerals in date meet field show no disruptions.

Genuine: In advanced die state, die break extends from Indian's braid to mouth.

Old or New—Envelopes Have Drawbacks

THIS MONTH'S COLUMN addresses a concern I'm surprised I haven't heard before, especially because the holder in question still is quite common in our hobby and was used even more frequently in the past.

Q. Are modern paper envelopes considered better than older paper envelopes in that they have less sulfur in the paper? I have never seen "acid free" advertising concerning the envelopes, and I assume they are really appropriate only for short-term storage. Are there any differences in the envelopes based on their particular preparation, such as the effects from bleaching or the dyes used to color them?

Also, do you know of problems with the small, cotton envelopes used especially with copper coins; specifically, do they "shed" small pieces of cotton that later cause spots? Would you consider mylar flips with cotton inserts adequate for long-term storage of uncirculated copper?

—T.S., Missouri

A. Most newer paper envelopes are better than their older counterparts (they contain less sulfur), but unless they are specifically marked "sulfur-free," they do contain some sulfur that can cause significant problems for coins stored in them. Finding sulfur-free paper products can be difficult, and you are safe in assuming that these envelopes are good only for short-term storage, but not for all coins. Coins can move within the envelopes, which presents a hazard for specimens with particularly delicate surfaces, like uncirculated and proof examples. I have purchased old coin collections that were stored largely in these envelopes, and many of the higher-quality coins stored with no added measure of protection had small hairline scratches on their surfaces, most likely from movement within the envelopes. These envelopes also provide only limited protection from the atmosphere.

In my experience, the white and yellow envelopes are the "safest"; the ones with colors are more likely to cause oxidation, although I know little of the dyes or the methods used to bleach the paper.

As far as the cotton envelopes are concerned, they shed little or no cotton fibers; therefore, I doubt they are likely to cause spots on coins stored within them. In conjunction with mylar flips, I would consider them moderately safe, although I would not recommend them for use with uncirculated copper coins. Coins inside these small envelopes can move about, and although the envelopes are soft, it is possible they could damage a delicate uncirculated or proof surface. They also provide limited protection from the atmosphere, although use with a mylar flip will lessen this exposure.

Quiz Answers

Thanks for your responses to the quiz in the October Numismatist (p. 1255). The questions and their answers follow, with brief explanations.

1) The U.S. Mint holders for mint sets from 1947-58: e) were made of high-sulfur cardboard and caused many of the coins they contained to tone. These holders produced many beautifully toned coins, although they eventually will damage the coins they contain.

2) To press in the protruding staple tips on a cardboard holder: b) press carefully with a pair of pliers, avoiding the coin. It's always a good idea to flatten these exposed tips, because they easily can scratch a coin in an adjacent holder.

3) True or False? The new 1996-W dime is the first circulation-strike coin to be produced at the Mint's West Point facility for more than two decades: false. The former West Point Assay Office (and now West Point Mint) has been producing cents for circulation since the early 1980s, but without a mintmark, so they are indistinguishable from Philadelphia-mint cents.

4) True or False? Acetone is a good solvent to use for cleaning coins because it is fairly non-toxic: false. Although not as toxic as other chemicals used for coin cleaning, acetone can be dangerous. In certain applications with good ventilation, it can be of benefit in removing residues from coins. (As always, if you don't know what you're doing, consult an expert.)

5) Who is J.P. Martin? d) Numismatist columnist, ANA instructor and ANAAB authenticator, at least most of the time. •

Grading Lincoln Cents

ALTHOUGH OTHER SERIES may receive more publicity and promotion, Lincoln cents are almost certainly the most widely collected of United States coins. There are probably millions of Americans filling coin folders from 1909 to date who are out of the numismatic mainstream and may know nothing of the organized hobby. Many more are simply hoarding any and all "Wheaties," those cents bearing the old reverse of 1909-58.

I'll repeat what I've said about other series, since it applies here as well: The grading of circulated Lincoln cents is a fairly straightforward process when one uses the illustrations and text found in Official A.N.A. Grading Standards for United States Coins. (I haven't seen the new, 5th edition of this book, but it should be in print by the time you read this.) There are, however, certain coins in this series that are exceptions to the usual grading rules, and these are listed in the book.

Date/mint combinations that the ANA grading guide advises are often found with deficient strikes include: 1911-D, 1914-D, 1917-D, 1918-D, 1918-S, 1921, 1921-S, 1922-D, 1923, 1923-S, 1924, 1924-S, 1925-D, 1925-S, 1926-S, 1927-D, 1927-S, 1928-S, 1929-D, 1929-S, 1930-S, 1935-D and 1935-S. While each of these issues may indeed be found poorly struck from worn and indistinct dies, the truth is that all Lincoln cents produced by the Denver and San Francisco Mints from the years 1911-27 are often seen poorly struck.

When grading a worn cent that lacks complete details, a grading service such as Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC) will take into account the overall surface condition of the coin. For instance, a 1920-S cent that shows only a few lines in the wheat ears (as a consequence of extreme die wear) yet possesses nearly full luster would grade About Uncirculated (AU) under a technical interpretation of grading, but the market grading employed by grading services would place this coin at some level of Extremely Fine (EF or XF). While the lack of design detail detracts from the coin's appeal and value, it does not relegate it to the level of Very Good (VG), the grade that normally denotes a coin displaying only a few wheat lines. This is the important distinction between a worn die and a worn coin.

The issue of strike is less important when grading unworn or Mint State coins. Here, market grading really comes to the forefront, as the most important factors when determining the grade of a Mint State coin are surface quality, luster and color. Surface quality simply refers to the number of contact marks and abrasions a coin has received. Being small coins, Lincoln cents can't display very many marks without being severely downgraded. A tiny nick or scratch may be relatively hidden in Lincoln's hair or the lines of the wheat ears, but a mark in the open field of a Mint State coin (particularly on the obverse) can lead to the loss of one or more grading points. Particularly serious are marks or abrasions through the date and mintmark; these can result in significant downgrading.

The mellowing of a cent's original bright-red or brassy color to a more subdued shade of red or brown is a natural process, one that may be slowed with varying degrees of success but never stopped entirely. With copper or bronze coins, the variables of luster and color are often intertwined. A highly lustrous cent can be fully brown or possess remarkable, multicolor toning, but most collectors still prefer to see at least some mint red. Beautifully toned cents can achieve a higher grade by virtue of their outstanding eye appeal, one of the principal components of market grading. Luster is important in all instances, since it provides the back-lighting necessary to bring out a cent's appeal, whatever its color.

There is no fixed rule for designating a Lincoln cent red (RD) versus red and brown (RB) or simply brown (BN). As a general rule, RD cents exhibit 85 to 90 percent of their original color, while RB cents display at least 15 to 20 percent red. Any coin with less red or non-red coloration will be designated BN. •

Stanley LeRoy "Roy" Crawford of Sanger, Texas, died on August 14, 1996. He was 91 years old.

Crawford was born in Laramie, Wyoming, where he attended public schools and later the University of Wyoming, majoring in petroleum engineering. Upon graduation from college in 1928, he secured a position with Texaco and was transferred to Port Arthur, Texas. After 43 years of service with the company, he retired to Ft. Collins, Colorado, where he lived for 23 years before moving back to Texas.

Crawford was proud of his long membership in the ANA, and introduced several relatives to the coin-collecting hobby. He and his wife, Gladys, were married for 68 years; she passed away on September 9, only weeks after his death. He is survived by two daughters, Shary Freeman and Shirley Noack; three grandchildren; and a great-granddaughter.

RODGER HERSHEY—ANA 32037

Rodger Edwards Hershey of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, died on October 11, 1996, at the age of 73.

Following his retirement as a lieutenant colonel after 30 years in the U.S. Marine Corps, Hershey took up the numismatic hobby, developing a particular interest in tokens.

Notes friend and fellow collector James Groninger, "Rodger was always looking for what he was collecting, but if he saw something at a show and he knew someone else was looking for it, he would buy it for them and bring it home."

Hershey regularly attended ANA conventions and served as finance chairman for the Association's 98th Anniversary Convention in Pittsburgh in 1989. In his later years, he was fond of saying, "If I go tomorrow, I haven't missed a thing."

He is survived by his wife of 53 years, Dorothea; three daughters, Suzanne Ford, Michelle Poccia and Denise Seaman; two sons, Rodger E. Jr. and Paul J.; a brother, Joseph S.; and eight grandchildren. •

Ft. Worth Multiplex Coin Show, held September 28-29, members of the International Association of Silver Art Collectors (IASAC) gathered for the club's 11th annual meeting. IASAC officers, trustees and members took advantage of the occasion to trade 1-ounce art bars and rounds and discuss the future of the club. Annual membership dues are $15 for the first year, $10 for subsequent years. Members receive a bimonthly journal, The Silver Bugle, which features informative articles and classified advertising. For further details, write to IASAC Club Secretary, P.O. Box 28415, Seattle, WA 98118.

John Lyons, secretary of the Metropolitan Coin Club of Atlanta

(GA), reports that a record crowd turned out for the club's October meeting, which featured Dr. Radford Stearns' illustrated talk about coins honoring his choices for the most influential figures of each century. Celebrating its 31st year, the club meets twice monthly at the Hammond Park Community Center on Glenridge Drive in Atlanta. For information, call 770/671-9220.

Under the guidance of teacher and ANA member Ralph Ross, the Clements Coin Club (CCC) in Sugar Land, Texas, has become the largest and most active high school coin club in the country. Currently, members are planning a trip to the 42nd Annual Florida United Numismatists Show in Orlando, January 9-12. In "The C-Cubed," the club's semi-monthly newsletter, CCC Board Member Stephanie Lo advises members, "The trip will only cost around [$250] . . . If you plan on working during the coin show, you can earn up to $120 a day! So please, consider going!"

Membership Report

New members will be listed twice annually, with the next publication tentatively scheduled for the June 1997 issue. Expelled, suspended and reinstated members will be listed monthly or as information becomes available.

CLUB NEWS

Jeff Oxman, a knowledgeable authority on Morgan dollars, spoke to hobbyists at the November 1996 meeting of the Los Angeles Coin Club. An active collector, researcher and writer in the field of silver dollars, Oxman is a member of several California clubs.

Have you ever wondered why two coins of the same denomination from the same country, each picturing a different ruler, show one portrait facing left and the other facing right? That's the question posed by Albertus Hoogeveen, editor of the bimonthly newsletter published by The Downy Numismatists of California. He explains to readers that "the rule of thumb is that rulers face the opposite direction as the previous ruler. . . . For example, Queen Elizabeth II is facing right on coins issued during her reign, while coins issued during the reign of her father, George VI, [show the king's portrait] facing left."

Christopher Connell has stepped down as editor of the "Sand Dollar," the award-winning newsletter of New Jersey's Ocean County Coin Club. During his eight-year tenure in that position, he produced 79 informative issues. At press time, a replacement had not been named.

The Missouri Numismatic Society (MNS) reports that its collection of reference books has been moved to the fifth floor of the St. Louis County Library. Collectors simply show their MNS membership card to the reference librarian to gain access to the collection.

the efforts of an adult member who has contributed significantly to introducing, assisting and encouraging young people in the hobby.

The Association now is accepting nominations for the award to be presented at the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City, July 30-August 3. Nominees will be judged on activities including, but not limited to, planning numismatic events or tours for young numismatists (including convention-related programs); serving as youth coin club advisors or Scouting merit badge counselors; signing up junior members for the ANA or local numismatic organizations; and writing articles geared toward young collectors. Address nominations for the Outstanding Adult Advisor Award to the ANA Education Department.

Special Rules Apply to Exhibiting in the "Big Apple"

Those who wish to exhibit at the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City should make plans now. Awards are presented for the best exhibits in 23 categories. In addition, a special award is given for the best display by a first-time exhibitor, and a People's Choice Award is given for the exhibit receiving the most votes from the public.

Because of the limited exhibit space at the convention site, the Marriott Marquis Hotel, exhibitors should be aware of the following changes in official exhibit rules for this particular event:

- Each competitive exhibitor is limited to one exhibit.
- Small material is limited to four ANA cases (3,200 square inches if exhibitor's cases are used). Large material is limited to five ANA cases (4,000 square inches if exhibitor's cases are used). In effect, this reduces the limits for each type of exhibited material by two cases.
- No panels will be available.
- Placement or removal of an exhibit by an agent will be permitted, but not both.

40 full-color images of Japanese paper money. The exhibit, which was displayed at the ANA Money Museum earlier this year, traces the development of Japan's monetary system in the early years of the Meiji Era.

A collector since the 1950s, Boling has specialized in Japanese material since 1973 and serves as a consultant and specialist, having written and edited several books on the subject. His exhibit includes rare, scarce and obscure Japanese paper money specimens that can be viewed in amazing detail on the ANA's Web pages.

ANA Receives Support for New York Show

In a cooperative effort, officials of the American Numismatic Association and the New York Coliseum Coin Show have agreed to help promote numismatics in New York City for a 10-day period that culminates with the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention at the Marriott Marquis Hotel, July 30-August 3.

The cooperative promotion, billed as "10 Days of Money in Manhattan," will include reciprocal news releases, joint publicity in the hobby and general news media, and a day of collaborative educational programming on Monday, July 28. A number of options for the latter currently are being considered, including seminars on coin grading, counterfeit detection, numismatic tax law and marketing, or special tours of Wall Street, the Federal Reserve Bank and the World Trade Center.

For more information about the New York Coliseum Coin Show, contact Jill Lagardere, show manager, at 800/359-9430. To obtain details about the ANA's anniversary convention in New York City, contact the Convention Department.

Feel the Pulse of the Convention in the Heart of New York City

New York City's bright, bustling, revitalized Times Square is the setting for the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention, July 30-August 3, marking the first time the Association has held its annual gathering in the "Big Apple" since 1976. The show is scheduled for the Marriott Marquis Hotel, whose Broadway location is just steps from the famed Theater District, shopping, fine dining and many famous landmarks.

The 50-story Marriott also serves as the headquarters hotel, with spacious rooms opening onto a 37-story atrium and offering dramatic, floor-to-ceiling views of the city.

For further information, contact the ANA Convention Department.

Bourse activity will occupy two levels of the elegant Marriott Marquis in New York City's revitalized Times Square.

New Grading Guide Employs Technical and Market Standards

The revised and much-improved fifth edition of the American Numismatic Association's grading guide is now available. This popular reference covers all aspects of grading United States coins, incorporating both technical and market approaches. Market influences were considered because, in some cases, the overall eye-appeal and value of a coin must be considered in determining its grade.

Edited by Kenneth Bressett, this latest softcover edition of Official A.N.A. Grading Standards for United States Coins is printed by Golden Books, Inc., publisher of A Guide Book of United States Coins (the popular "Red Book"), also edited by Bressett. The reference includes a new

In addition, the guide offers easy-to-follow descriptions for 13 standard conditions; an easy-to-use guide for grading coins quickly and accurately; and photographs showing the progression of wear for every type of U.S. coin from 1793 to the present in grades from About Good-3 to Mint State-70.

National Coin Week '97 Illuminates the Changing Face of Money

With announcement of the theme “The Changing Face of Money,” the ANA hopes to inspire collectors across the country to promote the 74th Annual National Coin Week (NCW), April 20-26. The topic serves as a springboard for presentations and exhibits highlighting America's redesigned paper money, and various proposals to eliminate the cent and to introduce a series of new, circulating 25-cent coins.

The ANA will help members plan activities, which can include:

- Staging local “treasure hunts” by putting low-value but rarely seen coins into circulation
- Setting up coin booths at local shopping malls
- Arranging classroom activities
- Developing exhibits for malls, banks and libraries
- Preparing talks for school, civic

■ The Potosí Mint Scandal and Great Transition of 1652 (ANA Library Cat. No. FA20.M4) by Sewall H. Menzel describes the intrigue and conspiracy that consumed the city of Potosí during the Spanish conquest in the Americas. This Bolivian town was founded in 1546, one year after silver was discovered in nearby Cerro Rico ("silver mountain"). Rising costs of extracting and refining silver produced the temptation to adulterate the silver metal with cheaper additives before it was marketed at the mint. This occurred with some frequency and in time led to considerable problems.

videotape that tells all about the salvage operation. Collectors and the general public are fascinated by sunken treasure. These coins have greatly inflated prices, but are a piece of history that will appeal to many.

"Six Decades of American Silver Coinage" sounds like quite a collection. What you get is a group of seven common coins in a plastic holder. The card in the case describes them as silver wartime nickel, Walking Liberty half dollar, Washington quarter, Franklin half dollar, Mercury dime, Roosevelt dime and Kennedy half dollar. Conditions seem to range from Fine on the older coins to Uncirculated for the 1964 issues.

I particularly dislike the headline that says "Don't miss this chance to own every American silver coin minted in the last six decades!" This set hardly includes every coin, and it does not even contain all of the type coins. The offer overlooked the 40-percent silver coins that contain a higher percentage of silver than the wartime nickels. You will get a certificate of authenticity with the set, if you want it. That means you will not receive counterfeits, or anything like that. I bet people will sleep better knowing this.

The cost of this magnificent set is $39.96, plus an undisclosed amount for shipping and handling. I have been told this is a very fast-selling item for the promoters. In fact, they can hardly keep enough coins in stock to fill orders (which are mostly from non-collectors). "Why not sell them?" I was told. "This is what customers want." I really couldn't argue with that kind of thinking, but I did register a complaint that the price was way too high for what was being offered.

For some reason, there is substantial market demand for sets of coins like this. Those who purchase them do not seem to mind paying two to three times the numismatic value. The promoters say it costs that much to advertise them, and they are encouraging people to become collectors. The real losers here are those who attempt to sell these coins to a coin dealer, and then the dealers get blamed for not paying what the owners believe these pieces are worth. •

Come Fly with the Eagles and Walk with the Turkeys

I REALLY FELT like I was missing out on a great opportunity when I read through a recent sales letter from a man in the Netherlands urging me to invest in gold coins for security and prosperity. "Come Fly with the Eagles and the World will be under your Wings," he promised. For some reason, whenever I hear "fly with the eagles," I think there are turkeys around somewhere. In this case, it wasn't going to be me.

The form letter addressed to "Dear Sir" was the first tip-off that this was less than a personal invitation for me to become wealthy. As near as I could tell, the company name was Family of Eagles. The explanation was so ambiguous, it was difficult to know if that was what the firm was selling or if it was its name. (The design on the reverse of the American gold bullion coins, as you know, was called Family of Eagles by its designer Miley Busiek.)

To get into this business and become a collector of gold coins, you can pay a deposit of \$260 for nine U.S. $\frac{1}{10}$ -troy-ounce gold coins, and pay the balance of \$400 with the commission you earn for introducing customers to the company. By sponsoring just two people, who in turn sponsor two more each, you earn a \$400 commission, and the coins are shipped to you. The scheme gets a bit more complicated as you get into it, but somehow you can expect to earn \$2,200 per week if you try hard.

The claim is made that these coins sell for $75 each at banks. This company will sell them to you for $73. It does not mention that most coin dealers sell the same thing for about $55 each. The beauty of this business, the offer says, is nobody will tell you, "You have scammed me, I have full pockets of gold coins," but "If you sold them (something else) they would be very upset with you."

One of our readers has written to the Disney company to protest its use of the word "coin" instead of "medal" in describing the silver 1-ounce rounds it is selling in its catalog. He also informed the firm that its price of $60 plus $8.85 for shipping and handling is excessive.

I think we all agree this is a troublesome promotion. Many such advertisers mistakenly call their medals "coins." Somehow they sell better when the public thinks they are government-issue coins. The problem is not as widespread as it once was because of concerned numismatists like this person who took the time to complain to the offender. There seems to be no other way to stem this kind of advertising. We should all be vigilant and speak out whenever we find abuses in the numismatic field. I have yet to hear if anything is being done to correct the wording in this catalog. These are honorable people, and I am hopeful they will respond to our concerns.

You now can own "A Piece of Secret WWII History" for only $79.95 plus $7.95 shipping charges. This is a Saudi Arabian silver 1-riyal coin recovered from a sunken ship, and it comes to you in a special package, along with a certificate of authenticity and a videotape of the salvage operation. Nothing wrong with this. It sounds kind of exciting, but you should know more about the coin you will be getting.

The Saudi riyals of World War II are silver coins of little value other than their bullion content. In today's market, they melt at under $2 each. They have a catalog value of $8 in nice condition, but are worth only bullion when worn. They are exotic and interesting coins worthy of inclusion in any collection. A little searching through any silver "junk box" probably will turn up several at a modest price.

The coins being offered here, however, are somewhat different. These were part of a secret World War II military cargo that included 3 million silver riyals and a fortune in silver bullion. They were on the Liberty ship S.S. John Barry, which was sunk by a torpedo in the Indian Ocean. The colorful brochure describing this promotion tells the story in some detail, and invites you to purchase one of the coins and the

PCI® CUSTOMERS TELL WHY MORE PEOPLE ARE TURNING TO PCI®

A professional coin information, grading, encapsulation & authentication service.

Serving the numismatic needs of the collector, investor & dealer since 1989 . . .
without the restraints and expense of a required industry network.

I have been a serious collector since 1969, and, of course, have my own opinions about grading, which happen to correspond almost identically to the standards of the ANA Grading Guide. I have, however, a number of your "slabs"—all of which I am very pleased with.

Unlike those "other" 3rd party graders/slabbers, you guys seem to be very consistent in your grading, and do so while meeting my personal grading standards.

— Ron

Thank you for all your assistance this year. Your services have been a godsend for people like me who are on a limited budget, but still need coin grading services at a reasonably low price. The services provided (to me) allowed me to get suspect coins graded accurately when I believed they were graded inaccurately, as well as other discrepancies in coin dealers affirm oaths of authenticity. Let me just say—keep up the good work in keeping the numismatic hobby honest.

— John

Thank you for taking the time to grade my coins. I think your company is the fastest and most accurate of all the grading services. I usually put my coins in plastic mylar flips for you to grade. However, some of these coins I bought through mail order, and I was afraid they would not take them back if they were tampered with. The 1824/2 cent is one example. Thank you for your understanding in this matter.

— S.A.B.

Just wanted to jot a note to you today and thank you for your kind attention in the matter of my 1962 "Cameo" Franklin half. I certainly felt that you folks went the extra mile to make sure that I remained a satisfied customer.

I tell the story to just about everyone I run into . . . just to illustrate the kind of effort that goes on at PCI in order to provide good customer service. I want everyone to know how good I think PCI is. Keep up the great work!

— D.L.

Though I still prefer accurately graded raw coins, which are my primary purchases, I have purchased a number of slabs from various 3rd party institutions, including PCI. Of all I've seen from what I have purchased, I believe that a PCI graded and encapsulated coin is of better quality than any of the other companies. You may consider that a compliment, as that is what is intended.

— R.B.

Several months ago, you made one of my coins even more special than it already was. It was a 1909 Lincoln Cent, the first one in my collection and one that I have had for about 30 years. You noted on the holder that it was "Robert's First Coin," and I thought that was very nice of you. Thank you for the extra consideration and "class."

chosen for the seal and its inference might prove to be an embarrassment should it not come to fruition? Treasurer Daniel Morgan thought so, or he would not have brought the subject to the forefront with Zieber.

The committee report was not discovered missing until 1849, when Treasury officials decided to make a new seal because the old one had become worn. The die cutter was informed that the design "must be copied exactly—in accordance with the law." A diligent search was made by "numerous interested parties," but all efforts to locate the report, or the law referred to, was "without avail," according to Treasurer Morgan.

Nor was the Treasurer bashful about expressing his opinions as to why the committee report might be missing. He was even willing to put his belief in writing for Zieber: "The legend on the Treasury Department seal is Thesaur. Amer. Septent. Sigil., being an abbreviation of the Latin sentence, Thesauri Americana Septentrionis Sigilum, meaning 'The Seal of the Treasury of North America.'" Morgan then summarized, "The inference drawn from the history of those times would be that in event of success by the Colonies, the whole of North America would be represented by the symbol!"

Canada may be a trading partner, but the country remains a neighbor still under the British crown. All that remains of the dream of the eventual geographical boundaries of the United States, by members of a committee of the Continental Congress, is the current seal of the Treasury of the United States. •

The Hidden Message in the Treasury Seal

EVERY RESEARCHER HOPES that his magnum opus, his reference tome, will live far beyond his personal years. Eugene Zieber was no exception. His ambitious guide, Heraldry in America, was published in 1895 by the Department of Heraldry of The Bailey, Banks & Biddle Company of Philadelphia. Today his book is a scarce and valuable reference for the serious study of seals, emblems and insignia of the United States, particularly of our Colonial times.

Zieber felt the knowledge of heraldry should be regarded as a "desirable, indeed a necessary, element in higher refinement and culture." His guide contained 950 illustrations. Many of the more important seals and insignias were full-color, steel-die engraved reproductions, an art specialized in by Bailey, Banks & Biddle. Others were wood-block prints, but the reference was complete, save for a single illustration.

There was a time when the United States Treasury Department zealously guarded the devices appearing on the nation's paper money, almost to a point of absurdity. Requesting permission to include the Treasury seal in his reference, Zieber was refused by the treasurer himself, Daniel N. Morgan (who served from 1893 to 1897). Morgan wrote directly to the author forbidding him to include any image of the Treasury seal in his reference catalog.

Not to be denied, Zieber published portions of Morgan's letter, and in lieu of a depiction of the Treasury seal, the following notation was inserted within the circle where the seal would have been:

"Office of/The Solicitor of the/Treasury./The Statutes expressly forbid any/person or persons, aside from those spe-/-cially mentioned, to make, print, engrave,/or have in their control, custody, or pos-/session any plate or print of the same,/or any-thing in likeness thereof used/in printing obligations of the United/ States (Section 5419 and 5430, RS.)./"F. A. Reeve,/"Solicitor."

Zieber facetiously captioned this notice as "Fig. 296." Then, with captions below, he advised his readers wishing to examine the Treasury seal to look at their U.S. paper money.

This bit of trivia makes an interesting sidebar to history, but the full implication of Morgan's letter is far more thought-provoking. It offers an insight into the territorial ambitions of the Continental Congress from the previous century.

Morgan noted that the idea of a Treasury seal owed its origin to action taken by the Continental Congress on September 26, 1778, when it was resolved "That a committee of three be appointed to prepare a seal for the treasury and for the navy." At the time, the Navy was under the jurisdiction of the Board of Admiralty, and the Treasury was under the Committee on Finance.

Ironically, the end result of the committee's recommendation for the seal of the Navy remains in print. Impressions are found on original papers on file. There is, however, no record of the actual report. Could it be the wording

At the left is the United States Treasury seal as it appeared in a standard reference on American seals 100 years ago. At the right is the seal today, which has been adapted for use on our nation's paper money.

THE ADOPTIVE EMPERORS: COINAGE OF ROME'S ZENITH

The English historian Edward Gibbon termed the second century A.D. the "happiest age in history." Between 96 and 180 A.D., the Roman Empire was ruled by a series of capable emperors. After the assassination in A.D. 96 of Domitian, the last of the Flavian emperors, the Senate chose one of their own members, the elderly Nerva, to succeed to the throne. To secure the support of the army, the new emperor adopted the general Trajan as his son and heir in A.D. 97. This adoption set a precedent, for the next four emperors—Trajan, Hadrian, Antoninus Pius, and Marcus Aurelius—would come to the throne as the adoptive son of their predecessor. Under these "adoptive emperors," the Roman Empire would reach the zenith of its power and prosperity.

In A.D. 98, Trajan became emperor upon the death of Nerva. Under Trajan, the Roman Empire underwent its last significant territorial expansion. After two campaigns (A.D. 101-102 and 105-106), Trajan annexed the Kingdom of the Dacians (modern Romania). In A.D. 105, the Kingdom of the Nabataeans was converted into the Roman province of Arabia Petraea. In A.D. 114, a dispute with Parthia led Trajan to annex Armenia and invade Mesopotamia. In A.D. 116, Mesopotamia was declared a Roman Province. However, rebellions in the East, including those of the Jews, forced Trajan to retreat. He died in A.D. 117 before he could resume campaigning in the East. Before his death, Trajan named his adopted son Hadrian as his heir.

The reign of Hadrian was one of consolidation. The new emperor gave up Trajan's eastern conquests—Armenia regained its former status as a Roman vassal state. Other frontiers were strengthened. In Britain, the wall he built to defend against the Scottish tribes is still to be seen. Hadrian spent most of his reign outside of Italy, touring the provinces to see first-hand what were each territory's needs. In A.D. 136, Hadrian adopted a certain L. Ceionius Commodus, who took the name Aelius Caesar, as his son and heir. However, the death of Aelius in A.D. 138 compelled Hadrian to designate a new heir, Antoninus. In turn, Hadrian compelled Antoninus to adopt Lucius Verus, the son of Aelius, and a nephew of Antoninus. Marcus Annus Verus, renamed Marcus Aurelius. Hadrian died later that same year.

The reign of Antoninus Pius (A.D. 138-161) was notable chiefly for its tranquility, although in Britain a new defensive line north of Hadrian's Wall was built to keep the Scottish tribes further at bay. Also notable was the long apprenticeship of Marcus Aurelius, who was named Caesar in A.D. 139. By the time of the death of Antoninus in A.D. 161, Marcus was thoroughly prepared to assume the burdens of office. As it turned out, they would prove to be considerable.

Upon his accession, Marcus Aurelius elevated his adoptive brother, Lucius Verus, to the position of co-emperor. Marcus, however, was clearly the supreme authority. Marcus was to spend much of his reign on campaign. Invasions of German tribes from the north and of Parthians from the east bedeviled the empire. Plague, brought back from the east by the army in A.D. 166, swept the empire (a second wave of plague carried Lucius Verus away in A.D. 169). Despite these shocks, Marcus was able to restore order on the eastern frontier and was poised to annex territories on the northern frontier at the time of his death A.D. 180. Marcus was succeeded by his son Commodus, thus breaking the pattern of succession through adoption. Commodus proved to be a despot. With his accession, Rome's greatest age came to an end. The assassination of Commodus at the end of the year A.D. 192 ushered in four years of civil war.

Due to recent purchases, we are able to offer a large selection of silver denarii of the "adoptive emperors."

to mark the beginning of the new arrangement. On a handsome brass sestertius of A.D. 186, the double-faced god is shown standing on a low plinth, or base, within an arched shrine, doubtless a representation of an actual statue in the city on the Tiber that would have been familiar to citizens in the late 2nd century.

Commodus, despite his claim to be the reincarnation of the legendary hero Hercules, succumbed to strangulation on the last night of the year A.D. 192. The new emperor, Pertinax, coming to imperial office on the first day of the new year, had every reason to invoke the aid of the "god of beginnings." It scarcely is surprising, then, that in his very first issue of coinage, we find a silver denarius with the legend IANO CONSERVAT, "to Janus, the defender [of the emperor]."

Unfortunately, the invocation appears to have fallen on deaf ears, as Pertinax was struck down by mutinous guards after a reign of only 86 days.

After this embarrassing failure, the "god of beginnings" made only two more appearances before his numismatic career was terminated. The first was on a denarius of Geta issued in 211, shortly after the death of his father, Septimius Severus. The reason for this appearance is not certain. It may refer to the new era of peace following the cessation of a long period of warfare on the northern frontier in Britain, or it may be related to the commencement of the first joint reign of two brothers in Imperial Roman history. That Geta's elder brother, Caracalla, did not choose this design for his coinage is scarcely surprising given the mutual hatred of the imperial siblings, which was to have such a tragic outcome little more than 12 months after their father's death.

Janus' final appearance on the Roman coinage was on a gold aureus of Gallienus, son of Valerian, struck during his sole reign (A.D. 260-68). The unique dedication, to IANO PATRI ("Father Janus"), accompanies a standing figure of the deity. With his own father languishing in a Persian prison after his capture in A.D. 260 by the Sassanid Shapur, Gallienus may have felt a need for a divine foster parent.

But again, Janus failed to protect his imperial ward, for Gallienus fell victim to the assassin's knife in the summer of 268. None of Gallienus' successors sought his divine assistance, and the checkered career of the "god of beginnings" finally was at an end. •

Janus, God of Beginnings

AT THE START of a new year, it is appropriate to give some thought to the Roman god after whom the month of January is named—Janus. This enigmatic deity derives his name from the noun ianua, meaning “the outer door of a house.” Our word “janitor” (“doorkeeper,” “caretaker”) has the same derivation. Just as a new episode in the life of a Roman citizen commenced when he passed through the door of a stranger’s house or the gate of a foreign city, so Janus came to be regarded as the “god of beginnings.”

By the closing decades of the 3rd century B.C., the cult of Janus apparently had risen to great importance, for his head was selected as the obverse type for the cast bronze as, the highest denomination in the series of aes grave coins introduced circa 225 B.C. Janus is shown as a mature man with a curly beard, looking into the future while contemplating the past.

This type remained essentially unaltered throughout the subsequent issues of Roman Republican bronze coinage. Inflation gradually took its toll, eliminating the smaller denominations one by one and making the as with its distinctive double head of Janus the most familiar coin in the purse of the Roman citizen.

At about the same time as the initial appearance of Janus on the aes grave series, a similar obverse type was introduced on the silver didrachm (“quadrigatus”) denomination. But this double-faced head was beardless, and it likely honored a different deity, variously identified as Fontus, son of Janus (by Edward Allen Sydenham in The Coinage of the Roman Republic) or the Dioscuri (by Michael H. Crawford in Roman Republican Coinage). Of all the obverse types for the denarius, the principal denomination of the

PRESENTS FROM THE PAST

Republican silver coinage, only one features the bearded head of Janus: the issue of the moneyer M. Furius Philus dated by Crawford to approximately 119 B.C.

In Roman Imperial times, it was not until the reign of Hadrian (A.D. 117-38) that the double-faced figure of Janus made his first appearance on coinage. However, more than half a century before, Emperor Nero issued a series of gold, orichalcum (brass) and copper coins picturing the curious structure known as the Ianus geminus, that stood in the Forum. It was a free-standing, double gateway used for ceremonial purposes, such as the formal departure of an army at the beginning of an important campaign. Thus, closing the doors of the Ianus geminus came to symbolize peace throughout the Roman world. On such an occasion, in A.D. 64, Nero inaugurated his series of coins marking the end of hostilities with Parthia.

The appearance of Janus on a gold aureus of Hadrian in A.D. 121 was to celebrate the beginning of a new “Golden Age”—the Saeculum Aureum—proclaimed on another aureus of the same year. The god is shown as a full-length, standing figure, leaning upon a scepter. Five years later, he appears again on a copper as in a series issued to mark Hadrian’s decennalia, or 10th anniversary of rule.

During the reign of Hadrian’s successor, Antoninus Pius, the 900th anniversary of the City of Rome was commemorated (April 21, A.D. 147). In the years leading up to this event, a number of coin types were introduced honoring the imperial city and associated deities and mythological stories. One of these is a standing figure of Janus, similar to that on Hadrian’s coinage, issued on the sestertius and as denominations in the year 140.

Almost 50 years later, the megalomaniac emperor Commodus, grandson of Antoninus Pius, was on the imperial throne. Among numerous other eccentricities, Commodus decided to rename the months in his own honor, and Janus made another appearance on the imperial coinage

Not Actual Size

On a bronze as from c. 225 B.C. (left), Janus is shown as a mature man, looking into the future while contemplating the past. On a copper as of Hadrian issued in A.D. 126 (right), he is depicted as a standing figure with a scepter.

Classical Coins of Quality and Distinction

Mithrapata, Dynast of Antiphellos - AR Stater, ca. 380 BC

During the 5th and 4th centuries BC, Lycia (in modern day Turkey) was under Persian suzerainty. The right to strike coins was granted to Lycian Dynasts down to the time of the invasion by Maussollos from Caria in 360 BC. Among these suzerains were the Dynasts of Antiphellos, including a certain Mithrapata, who reigned in about 380 BC. Although little is known about these dynasts, stylistic analysis of the images on their coins provides a clue to their chronology. The lion's head with forepaw—found on the obverse of some coins struck for Mithrapata—can readily be compared to the known issues of Knidos in use after 394 BC. The first major find of Dynastic issues from Lycia was made in 1957. Extensive research was compiled from 488 Lycian coins in this find and published as "The Coin Hoard from Podalia." For further information, see The Numismatic Chronicle (1971). It is relatively certain that the period of the early 4th century proposed by Olçay and Mørkholm is the correct period for this rare series of coins.

In his attempt to preserve our early coinage, Adam Eckfeldt took dies from the Mint vaults to strike examples of past coinage that were not represented in the Mint's collection. In doing this, he may have inadvertently created die marriages in the national collection that do not correspond with dies mated for original coinage.

Eckfeldt retired from his position as chief coiner in 1839 at the age of 70. His co-workers honored him with a gold medal (cataloged by R.W. Julian as MT-18 in Medals of the United States Mint: The First Century, 1792-1892). Moritz Furst designed the obverse, and the reverse design probably was by Franklin Peale, whom Eckfeldt recommended as his replacement. (See my August 1994 column, "Peale Helped Mechanize the Mint," p. 1137.)

Retirement for Eckfeldt meant that he no longer received pay from the Mint. However, he continued to come in and perform the work of Chief Coiner until shortly before his death on February 6, 1852. This gave Peale ample time to use Mint equipment to strike medals for public sale.

Adam Eckfeldt married twice. His April 3, 1792, marriage to Maria Hahn produced no children. From his marriage to Margaretta Bausch came Jacob Reese, Adam C., Anna, Sarah and Susanna.

Three generations of the Eckfeldt family worked at the Mint for 133 consecutive years. Adam Eckfeldt gave about 60 years of service to the Mint as supplier, employee and volunteer. His son Jacob (1803-72) served as assayer at the Mint for 40 years beginning in 1832. His daughter Susanna married William Ewing DuBois, first curator of the Mint collection. The family record for service at the Mint was held by Adam Eckfeldt's grandson Jacob Bausch Eckfeldt (1846-1938), who worked there for 64 years, from 1865 to 1929.

I believe everyone in America with the name Eckfeldt is a descendant of John Jacob Eckfeldt. In the course of my biographical research, the Eckfeldt family has emerged as one of my favorite subjects. I have talked to three Eckfeldt descendants who are generally aware of the contributions made by their ancestors. Although they have examples of the Eckfeldt medal in silver and bronze, I have yet to locate the gold Eckfeldt medal. • and Martha, Secretary of the Treasury Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson, Mint Director David Ritzenhouse and Chief Coiner Henry Voight. Adam Eckfeldt appears in the background manning his screw press. It is quite unlikely that the event portrayed actually occurred.

The site for the first Philadelphia Mint passed to government ownership on July 18, 1792, and demolition of the existing building and construction of the new facility began. Eckfeldt sold the Mint three balance scales in November 1792, and he brought a lathe to the Mint for use in turning dies.

When newspapers criticized the 1793 Chain cent design, Eckfeldt produced dies for the Wreath cent that replaced it. Mint records show that Eckfeldt performed piecework in July 1795, and on January 1, 1796, he began to work as a regular employee, assisting the chief coiner.

Eckfeldt built one of the new presses needed to replace those imported from Jean Pierre Droz's French firm. He also designed the device that fed planchets into the dies and ejected struck coins. According to the late Walter Breen, when dies were too brittle and cracked easily, Eckfeldt solved the problem by spraying water on the die face to temper the steel evenly.

Chief Coiner Voight died in 1814, and President James Madison appointed Adam Eckfeldt to replace him on February 15 of that year. As chief coiner, Eckfeldt continued to improve the machinery and processes of the Mint. In 1827 he bought an adjoining lot and leased it to the Mint to provide more space. (In another familiar painting of the first Philadelphia Mint, commissioned by Frank H. Stewart [author of History of the First United States Mint], artist Edwin Lamazure makes it appear that vacant land surrounded the facility. Actually the area was developed, with houses on adjoining lots.)

Adam Eckfeldt had the remarkable foresight to set aside coins from early production at the Mint, as well as fine examples of foreign coins submitted to the Mint with bullion deposits. One piece saved only for its bullion value was a Brasher doubloon. These coins became the foundation for the Mint's collection, officially established in July 1838 and donated to the Smithsonian Institution in 1923.

Adam Eckfeldt Struck the First U.S. Coins

ADAM ECKFELDT STRUCK the first United States coins in 1792 using a hand-powered screw press he had constructed. By the time of his retirement from the Philadelphia Mint nearly a half century later, Eckfeldt had guided the Mint through its transition from horse to steam power, and preserved coins for the Mint's collection that now are national treasures. His family was closely linked with the Mint well into the 20th century, and in 1996 the American Numismatic Association honored Adam Eckfeldt for his initial role in our country's numismatic history by inducting him into the Numismatic Hall of Fame.

During early attempts to establish an American coinage, craftsmen from Europe provided much-needed technical skills. One such craftsman was blacksmith and machinist John Jacob Eckfeldt (1733-1818), who moved from Nuremberg, Bavaria, to Philadelphia in about 1765. Sons of German parents frequently were named John, but known by their middle names. Such was true of John Adam Eckfeldt, born to John Jacob Eckfeldt and Marie Magdalena Schneider in Philadelphia on June 15, 1769. Adam Eckfeldt apprenticed at his father's shop before going to work for the Mint.

Robert Morris, superintendent of finance under the Articles of Confederation, had a proposal for American coinage and, with the approval of Congress, conducted early coinage experiments. Old ledgers show the government paid John Jacob Eckfeldt $5.18 on February 8, 1783, to forge dies for this coinage. The dies were cut by silversmith A.

(Abraham) DuBois, who received $72 on May 5 for sinking and hardening four pairs of dies to produce the 1783 Nova Constellatio experimental patterns. However, no circulating coinage came from these dies.

In 1792 Adam Eckfeldt forged machinery for the proposed Mint, building the screw press used to strike the first American coins. Eckfeldt cut the obverse die used for those early specimens, and many publications attribute the reverse die to Robert Birch. (Carl Carlson's excellent article entitled "Birch and the Patterns of '92" [The Numismatist, March 1982, p. 628] refutes that attribution, crediting the reverse die to William Russell Birch, who did not move to America until 1794, but may have produced the die during an earlier visit.)

On July 13, 1792, Eckfeldt struck 1,500 half dimes in a cellar owned by John Harper at Sixth and Cherry Streets in Philadelphia. President George Washington provided the silver bullion, but stories that the precious metal came from Martha Washington's silver service are fanciful. Students of Mint history are familiar with John Ward Dunsmore's 1914 painting Inspecting the First Coins of the First U.S. Mint, which shows President Washington were conducted casually and pleasantly. At that time, the ANA had difficulty persuading enough dealers to rent bourse space at the annual convention to make the show financially worthwhile. After the Professional Numismatists Guild, founded in 1955, gained strength, its leading activists, Abe Kosoff and Sol Kaplan, guaranteed that the PNG would pick up any slack in ANA table sales. Thus, the ANA could confidently book space in a hotel, knowing it did not have to worry about dealer support.

Adam Eckfeldt, who struck the first United States coins in 1792 and served the Mint for nearly 50 years, is depicted at the far right in Frank Reilly's painting A Specimen of the Work of America's First Mint. David Rittenhouse, the first director of the Mint, is shown examining a specimen.

After the great coin boom ignited in 1960 (coinciding with the launch of Coin World, the discovery of the 1960 "small date" cent, etc.), many dealers set up shop. For the first time, there were more applicants for bourse tables than there was space.

Soon the PNG was not needed by the ANA. Abe Kosoff and others felt slighted, and for quite a few years there were strained relations between the two organizations. More recently the two groups have pulled the numismatic hobby wagon in the same direction using the same harness. Nevertheless, in this hobby, dealers frequently are viewed as "them" and collectors as "us."

Norman Shultz

Norm Shultz began his coin trade around World War I and remained active for many decades thereafter, assuming the "Dean of American Numismatists" mantle after B. Max Mehl passed away in 1957. In later life, he resided in Salt Lake City, where he kept his inventory in several large vaults. Shultz was a fine fellow who was liked by all who knew him. In fact, it would be difficult to imagine him involved in even a casual argument!

His specialty was silver dollars, and he had a large stock of these long before the Treasury releases of 1962-64. His numismatic career can be traced by reading his advertisements in The Numismatist over a long period of years.

A lot more could be said about any one of the above personalities, and books could be written about some (Mehl being a prime candidate). The others in the Yeoman and Raymond list I did not mention either never crossed my path, passed away before I became active in the coin business, or talked with me just once or twice.

Kenneth W. Lee

Kenneth Lee of Glendale, California, had, as his first love, gold quarters, half dollars and dollars minted in California beginning in the early 1850s. For many years (until Breen and Gillio's California Pioneer Fractional Gold was published), his book on the subject, California Gold, Dollars, Half Dollars, Quarter Dollars, was the standard source for variety attribution. Ken was a quiet, very friendly fellow, and was apt to be set up at Southern California coin shows.

James P. Randall

It would be interesting to learn more about dealer Jim Randall of Chicago (later, Florida).

A tall, slightly built man with glasses, Randall was a familiar face at coin shows in the mid 1950s, but after that I don't recall seeing much of him. He was affable in his dealings and always had some rarities for sale. He was one of the relatively few Americans who attended the King Farouk Collection sale in Cairo in 1954. Randall's first love was patterns, and I bought quite a few from him.

Max M. Schwartz

Max Schwartz, a contributor to Wayne Raymond's Standard Catalogue, was one of Abe Kosoff's closest friends and did a lot of buying and selling through him. Max's main interest was tokens, with large cents second. In both disciplines, he gathered impressive cabinets. For a time in the 1960s, he served as secretary of the Professional Numismatists Guild (PNG).

Lewis M. Reagan

For many years, Lewis M. Reagan of Wichita, Kansas, ran the day-to-day affairs of the ANA. He carried his papers in a brown-leather briefcase, and at a show or meeting could make a quick decision as to what needed to be done. At that time, the ANA Board of Governors and other officers met infrequently and mainly made major policy decisions.

The ANA was not "big business" back then. There was no headquarters building (this would not happen until the mid 1960s), and affairs

THIS MONTH I continue with part three of my commentary on the many people behind the development of A Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book").

Charles E. Green

Charlie Green, a contributor in 1946 to both the Yeoman and Raymond price guides, did business by mail from Chicago. His company title was "R. Green," taken from the name of his wife, Ruth Green, who also was active in the firm. Charlie was confined to a wheelchair and did not travel widely, but he did manage to get to a couple of leading coin shows each year.

For a long time, his ads appeared on the inside front cover of Numismatic Scrapbook Magazine, which in the 1950s was the be-all and end-all in monthly coin market spirit and information. The Numismatist was being published, but it was considered more of an erudite journal and record of club meetings than a forum for buying and selling.

Charlie seemed to specialize in scarce and rare coins. For example, if I had a client who wanted to buy some Dahlonga or Charlotte Mint gold coins, Charlie would have been a good source to check.

Toivo Johnson

In the 1950s, Toivo Johnson ran a mail-order business in Maine and was one of those rare coin dealers who was known to just about everyone, but whom few actually had met. He did not go to coin shows, did not attend auctions and usually kept to his own affairs. However, he did a lively trade, especially in commemoratives, and was highly regarded for this specialty. I do not recall ever meeting him, but I did talk with him on the telephone on several occasions.

Later, in the 1960s when the Presidential Art Medals company ignited the craze for medals (which eventually led to Joe Segel forming the wildly successful Franklin Mint), Toivo Johnson got into the game as well, and made several large-diameter pieces reproducing the art of Augustus Saint-Gaudens and other notable sculptors.

J. Hewitt Judd

Dr. J. Hewitt Judd of Omaha, Nebraska, was a cheerful addition to many numismatic gatherings in the 1950s and early 1960s. He bought most of his coins through Abe Kosoff, and when he sold them, Kosoff was the conduit.

In the 1950s, Kosoff encouraged Dr. Judd to rewrite the old (1913) Adams-Woodin book on pattern coins. For a period of perhaps four or five years, Judd and Kosoff kept index cards and file folders on pattern varieties, market offerings and the like, which culminated in Judd's 1959 book on the subject. This publication, United States Pattern, Experimental and Trial Patterns, later went through seven editions.

James F. Kelly

A jeweler by trade in downtown Dayton, Ohio, Jim Kelly discovered coins early on, and in the 1940s, made numismatics his specialty. He was very active, attending many coin shows, and was a hail-fellow-well-type of person.

In 1960 J. Oliver Amos, founder of Coin World, tapped into Kelly's experience and asked him to write the "Trends" column, which he did for many years thereafter. By this time, he lived in a new home in the Dayton suburb of Englewood and operated his mail-order coin business from the pine-paneled basement of his house. Kelly usually had nice stock and preferred gold and silver coins. Every once in a while, he put out a little newsletter—I believe its title was "Kelly's Coins and Chatter."

Jim Kelly was one of the first to import American gold coins from foreign countries, acquiring a particularly fine stock of Carson City $20s in the 1950s and early 1960s. Of course, his competitors were quite interested in learning of his specific overseas source(s). In response to one query, Kelly might say that they came from Argentina; to another, he might say Venezuela.

In 1965 Jim Kelly was one of the founders of Paramount International Coin Corporation, about which many interesting things could be written.

S.M. Koeppel

I knew Sam Koeppel when he lived in San Bernardino, California, I believe (or perhaps he was involved in moving there from downtown Los

GOOD NEWS FOR ANA MEMBERS!

THE NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA
IS THE OFFICIAL GRADING SERVICE
OF THE
AMERICAN NUMISMATIC ASSOCIATION

ATTN: ANA Members

The American Numismatic Association has selected Numismatic Guaranty Corporation of America (NGC) to serve its members as the ANA's authorized grading service. The reputation of NGC for accuracy and integrity impressed the ANA's board and management, as did the company's solid program of numismatic education. Premier among these efforts is PHOTO PROOF,TM an exciting new way to enjoy one's coins while learning more about them.

ANA members can submit coins to NGC through the ANA itself, assuring that their valued items will be handled throughout by persons knowledgeable in their care. Offered services include certification (grading and encapsulation), as well as PHOTO PROOFTM (full-color digital images of your coin accompanied by an expertly written evaluation and historical text). The value of PHOTO PROOFTM in particular as an instrument of learning was summed up by ANA Executive Director Robert J. Leuver: "It was the educational aspect of PHOTO PROOFTM that helped clinch the negotiations. This will help all collector-members learn more about the pieces while providing superb grading by one of the foremost certification firms in the country."

NGC was selected over its competitors to be the ANA's official grading service because of its outstanding record of service to the numismatic community. Respected by collectors and dealers alike for its consistent grading, NGC has made a firm commitment to the future of numismatics. While providing both certified grading and PHOTO PROOFTM services to the ANA's members, NGC is also sustaining the hobby in cooperation with the ANA through shared resources. The talent and experience of both organizations are being combined in educational projects designed to meet the needs of collectors and dealers alike. In addition, NGC is furnishing a source of revenue to the ANA so that America's premier organization for coin collectors can better fulfill its mission.

For information on how to submit coins for certification and/or PHOTO PROOFTM, see the instructions and submission forms in this issue of The Numismatist. If you have any questions about these services, call the ANA at 1-800-467-5725 or call NGC at 1-800-NGC-COIN. For specific information about PHOTO PROOFTM, call 1-800-PROOF 67. We love to talk coins!

... COLLECTORS WHO ARE knowledgeable and astute are more likely to reap the greatest benefits from their investments.

Knowledge and Good Taste

AS IN ANY collecting area involving antiquities or works of art, collectors who have acquired knowledge and discernment are more likely to reap the greatest benefits from their investments. For those seeking to enhance their numismatic knowledge, basic literature is available in many public libraries; some university libraries, such as the Classics Library of the University of Cincinnati, have outstanding numismatic sections. The American Numismatic Association maintains the largest circulating numismatic library in the world; its members can borrow books for only the cost of postage and insurance.

Among the standard references I would recommend reading before investing in coins are R.S. Yeoman's Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book," now in its 50th edition); Barclay Head's Historia Numorum for Greek coins (first published in 1911 and reprinted several times); and David Sear's Roman Coins and Their Values (1988) and Byzantine Coins and Their Values (1987) for Roman coins. For world coins going back to about 1750, there is the excellent, two-volume Standard Catalog of World Coins, Deluxe ANA Centennial Edition (1991), which gives market prices for various grades of preservation. Beyond these works, there are many specialized references.

On the negative side of numismatic investing, the unwary sometimes are offered common, low-grade material, including so-called non-circulating, legal-tender (NCLT) coins issued by governments at prices well above face value. The investment potential of such issues looks dreary to me.

Other unpleasant realities must be considered, such as the danger of theft or environmental damage. Proper storage is critical to avoiding both. Counterfeits of rare coins have been around for centuries, but collectors can learn from experienced numismatists how to detect spurious pieces. Determining when to sell, or selecting a dealer or auctioneer, also can be stressful. Nevertheless, coins offer many possibilities to the wise investor, and not just in terms of material rewards. •

Born in Cincinnati, Charles E. Weber, Ph.D., has taught at the University of Cincinnati, the University of Missouri, Louisiana State University and the University of Tulsa. Among the articles he has written for THE NUMISMATIST since 1953 are several dealing with the metrological aspects of numismatics, including "Gravimetric Characteristics of Greek Silver Coins" (May 1979). His current numismatic studies focus mainly on Greek and Indian coins.

There is no substitute for knowledge. Consult standard numismatic references before investing in coins.

IN 1941 I acquired at auction a beautiful 1798 silver dollar for $4.10; this coin now is worth at least 100 times that amount.

survivors, only a few are in higher grades of preservation. These few extant 1794 dollars are in strong demand for two reasons: they represent the earliest examples of that U.S. denomination; and they are part of a series struck for only a few years, followed by a hiatus of nearly four decades. As a consequence, collectors and investors who desire early U.S. silver coins often gravitate to half dollars, which are attractive and relatively available. In addition, they were struck with dies of great and often interesting variety.

Some Numismatic Investments That Paid Off

TO ILLUSTRATE THE potential of coins as long-term investments, let me cite a few examples from my own experience. When living in Europe from 1945-48 with dollars in my pockets, I bought a number of coins that remain in my collection today, still highly treasured. Good ancient coins and early large European silver issues now bring about 20 to 100 times as much as they did as recently as the 1950s. In 1941 I acquired at auction a beautiful 1798 silver dollar for $4.10; this coin now is worth at least 100 times that amount. In the 1950s, common Byzantine gold solidi, especially those of the 6th and 7th centuries A.D., sold for as little as $10 to $15 each; today their prices run about 20 to 30 times that amount.

In 1945 a European dealer sold me a well-preserved 1793 U.S. cent that now has a market value of well over $1,000. It was one of the best purchases I ever made, since I paid the equivalent of only a few cents. In 1952 I came across a lot comprising some 400 ancient Greek bronze coins in the stock of a Dayton, Ohio, dealer and was able to purchase it for only $155. Many of these coins were worn and of modest value, but the current market value of some of the pieces is nearly as much as I paid for the whole group.

Also in 1952, I paid a dealer $50 for a gold augustalis (which I consider one of the most famous and beautiful of all medieval European coins), struck by Emperor Friedrich II of Hohenstaufen in Italy beginning in 1231. Its present market value is the better part of $10,000. I have not seen an augustalis in an American auction catalog for quite a few years, although the issue is in strong demand.

I have such an intense love for and attachment to my coin collection that I shall probably never test the market by selling it. Nevertheless, I recognize that if I were to need cash, my collection would prove to be an important asset.

Any discussion of coins as investments must consider the very meaning of the term "rare." Early U.S. dollars, such as this 1794 specimen in Very Fine (VF)-25 condition, are difficult to find in higher grades of preservation and are ardently sought by collectors and investors.

THE RARE-COIN market is subject to various macro-economic factors . . . and probably certain demographic and educational factors.

centuries B.C. also exhibit a striking beauty.

The collecting of coins for their historical associations and aesthetic values goes back at least a half millennium. In my personal library is a big, thick book by the Bavarian scholar Adolf Occo, Imperatorum Romanorum Numismata, that was published in Milan in 1683. The book attempts to list all the gold, silver and bronze coins of the Roman Empire. It demonstrates that by the late 17th century, coin collecting (and hence a coin market) had long existed in Europe. Indeed, collecting ancient coins was a pursuit of the Renaissance culture throughout western Europe.

The third area of interest in coins is metrological. The weight and metallic content of coins of a given time and area introduce collectors to their economic function.

Factors Affecting the Rare Coin Market

GENERALLY SPEAKING, COINS are most effective as investments on a long-term basis. As in the case of all investment markets, fads come and go. The rare-coin market (along with markets in other antiquities) is subject to various macroeconomic factors, in addition to availability (such as the discovery and importation of coin hoards), and probably certain demographic and educational variables. The widespread teaching of Latin and Greek, for example, undoubtedly stimulated interest in the ancient coins struck in countries where those languages were spoken. Finally, nationalistic sentiments also have played a part in coin investment, with collectors having an understandable interest in the antiquities produced by their ancestors.

When examining the market for rare coins, the question of what is "rare" must be addressed. U.S. $20 gold pieces of 1850 and later, and silver Morgan and Peace dollars, were struck by the millions. Very few individual dates can be considered "rare," even given that the definition is relative. A number of U.S. coins issued before 1834 (the year in which the gold content of U.S. coinage was reduced by about 7 percent) are indeed rare, especially individual dates and, even more so, certain die varieties.

One example of such rarities is the 1794 dollar, of which only 1,758 seem to have been struck. Of these, only about 100 survive, and of the

An Investment in History and Beauty

Those with a knowledge of coins and an understanding of the motives for collecting are more likely to reap rewards from their investments in numismatics.

PERHAPS THE GREATEST "return" from investing in coins comes in the form of aesthetic and intellectual gratification, which can hardly be expressed in simple material terms. In recent decades, however, coins have proved to be good long-term financial investments and stores of value for owners who acquired them with knowledge and discernment.

Reasons to Collect

TO UNDERSTAND THE investment value of coins, we must be cognizant of the various motives for collecting them. One can collect coins with any one or combination of three areas of interest in mind: the historical, the aesthetic and the metrological.

Coins have an almost unique association with historical events, and these connections in themselves provide gratification for their owners. For example, much of what we know of the Hellenistic culture in northern India during the 3rd and later centuries B.C. we obtained from coins with Greek (and later bilingual) inscriptions. Even small silver and bronze coins of the Hellenistic kings in what is now northern India and Pakistan offer their owners a unique historical intimacy with those areas. They are not rare as a group.

Examples of coins that offer great aesthetic satisfaction include ancient Greek coins; the German coinages in the Romanesque style (bracteates produced from thin, silver sheets around 1150 to 1200); large silver coins of various European countries from the 16th to 18th centuries; and United States coins prior to 1834. ALL TOLD, AS many as 132 die adjustment strikes, representing a variety of obsolete and modern-day U.S. coinage, have been documented.

the devices, giving the appearance of a weak strike). Die adjustment strikes must have the correct planchet weight, diameter and specific gravity. These official specifications can be found in various Mint publications or the Coin World Almanac. A pocket-sized digital scale, available from hobby supply shops, will give you the weight of a coin quickly and accurately.

The rims rarely are fully formed, unless the planchet was struck at close to full pressure. Coins that typically have reeded edges—dimes, quarters, half dollars and most dollars—will exhibit little or no reeding. The edges of die adjustment strikes for cents and nickels generally are rounded, as opposed to squared.

If you still are uncertain about a specimen, seek the advice of a professional, as counterfeit die adjustment strikes are known to exist. I have had occasion to examine a counterfeit 1927 Standing Liberty quarter die adjustment strike. It failed the tests for weight, diameter and specific gravity, and showed signs of having been cast.

All told, as many as 132 die adjustment strikes, representing a variety of obsolete and modern-day U.S. coinage, have been documented. (No die adjustment strikes are known to have been made before 1864, nor are any known for the Shield nickel, Seated Liberty half dollar and dollar, Barber quarter and half dollar, Trade dollar or any U.S. gold coin.) Who knows? Maybe that worn-looking nickel you bought at the local coin show will bring the total to 133!

An active collector of error coins, Rich Schemmer has researched die adjustment strikes for more than 10 years. He has served the Combined Organizations of Numismatic Error Collectors of America (CONECA) for a decade, including four years as president.

FOR INSTANCE, ONLY five Morgan dollar die adjustment strikes are documented, four of which are in the hands of collectors . . .

A Sampling of Rare Specimens

EXAMPLES OF DIE adjustment strikes are few and far between. For instance, only five Morgan dollar specimens are documented, four of which are in the hands of collectors (the fifth resides in the Museum of the American Numismatic Association). Why are so few known, when hundred of millions of these dollars were struck? As experimental pieces, they would have been destroyed. Others simply may have looked like very worn specimens and were melted down in the 1980s when the silver market was high.

First, let's take a look at a die adjustment strike for an 1898 Morgan dollar (Example 1). The coin obviously is weakly struck, though its weight and metal content conform to Mint specifications. (Be careful not to confuse die adjustment strikes with worn coins, which actually weigh less because metal has been worn away.) Also notice that the denticles along the rim of this Morgan dollar are nearly full; usually the rim on a die adjustment strike is poorly formed and appears somewhat rounded, much like that of an unstruck planchet. One known Morgan dollar die adjustment strike shows absolutely no design on the obverse or reverse, but has nearly full denticles along its edge.

Example 2 compares the edges of a Morgan dollar planchet, die adjustment strike and regular-issue coin. The edge of the planchet is devoid of reeds, as these are imparted by the collar (in reality, a third die) during striking. The die adjustment strike shows only faint reeding, as the striking pressure was not great enough to force the metal completely into the collar. The normally struck Morgan dollar exhibits strong reeding.

The earliest known die adjustment strike is for an 1864 2-cent piece (Example 3). Like the 1898 Morgan dollar described above, this unique coin is weakly struck, yet its weight and specific gravity are correct. The rims, however, are poorly formed.

Another unique die adjustment strike is known for an 1877 Seated Liberty quarter (Example 4). It resembles a very worn coin (a so-called "cull"); only a partial outline of Liberty's leg and drapery is visible, along with some faint stars at the left and right. Its rims look like those of an unstruck planchet, with nearly no reeding on the edge.

Authenticating Die Adjustment Strikes

AS MENTIONED, DIE adjustment strikes are easily mistaken for worn coins. They also can resemble coins struck from "filled" dies (that is, dies that have accumulated grease or other foreign matter in the recesses of

... THE DIE SETTER is responsible for adjusting the press when new dies are installed. Any trial strikes are condemned and sent for melting.

If a planchet is not fed into the press as planned, proper die spacing ensures the dies do not smash into each other (an occurrence known as "clashing"). When this happens, the imprint of one die is left on the other. Coins struck with clashed dies show faint images of the obverse on the reverse or vice-versa.

A Little-Changed Process

NINETEENTH-CENTURY UNITED States coinage was produced on steam or electric coin presses that employed huge flywheel mechanisms. To adjust the dies, the operator had to stop the press by depressing a brake at the base. An excerpt from the March 12, 1878, edition of Chicago's Daily Tribune describes the first Morgan dollar struck at the Philadelphia Mint, including the process of adjusting the dies:

The dies were finished soon after noon, and the first pair was placed in the largest coining machine used for double eagles. A little time was spent and a half dozen planchets spoiled before the dies were exactly adjusted. Then Albert Downing, foreman of the coining room, put a polished planchet under the press, and, giving the wheel a single revolution, the first dollar was stamped. It was removed by hand, and, critical examination developing flaws, the pressure was readjusted and another put in. Ten more were then coined, but the eleventh was found defective, and this, as well as the first, was [at] once defaced and returned to the melting room.

This eyewitness report not only confirms the use of die adjustment strikes in the mid to late 1800s, but also that the flywheel made a single revolution per strike, at which point the coin was removed and examined. Previously, it was thought the flywheel continued to rotate several times before coming to a complete stop. Today's technologically advanced presses can be stopped in a fraction of a second, as was demonstrated for me during a recent tour of the Denver Mint.

During my visit, I also had an opportunity to talk with four Mint officials, who affirmed that die adjustment strikes still are used today, based on a process handed down from generations of Mint press operators. They indicated that the die setter is responsible for adjusting the press when new dies are installed. Any trial strikes are condemned and sent for melting. Also, the presses are shut down 15 minutes before the end of a pressman's shift to allow time for cleanup and security checks. The incoming shift inspects the press, lubricates the equipment, and checks the pressure before resuming coinage production.

The Elusive Die Adjustment Strike

Looking much like errors, worn coins or weakly struck examples of the coiner's art, these rare pieces provide insight into the minting process.

IMAGINE FINDING A numismatic rarity that is unknown to most collectors . . . a United States coin with fewer than 25 specimens recorded, possibly lying somewhere in a dealer's "junk box." Sound unlikely? Well, let me introduce you to "die adjustment strikes."

Despite their appearance, die adjustment strikes are not errors, but rather cousins to pattern coins and die trials. The latter are defined as "experimental pieces," that is, any coins struck from official dies but are not regular issues. A pattern generally represents a new design, motto or denomination to be considered for adoption as a regular issue. Die trials are struck from regular dies in metals other than those intended for regular use.

Die adjustment strikes, on the other hand, are struck from approved coinage dies in authorized metals. They represent the very first strike or strikes a pressman makes before beginning actual coinage production. Like patterns and die trials, they, too, are considered "experimental pieces."

Why Dies Must Be Adjusted

DIE ADJUSTMENT STRIKES enable the press operator to determine the pressure or die spacing necessary to adequately bring up a coin's design. The operator places a planchet between the dies and strikes it at reduced pressure. Then, using this same planchet (or a series of new planchets), he gradually increases the pressure or adjusts the spacing of the dies until he gets a fully struck coin.

Nineteenth-century coin presses employed a huge flywheel. The press was stopped by means of a brake pedal on the right side.

Special orders included foreign coins, U.S. Jefferson nickels, and horseshoe-shaped encasements punched for use as key chains. The piece at right honors Virginia Culver, president of the Token and Medal Society (1964-65) and later of the American Numismatic Association (1973-74).

material of all sorts became much more affordable with the introduction of offset photo lithography. The entire American culture was changing as well. By the end of the decade, encased coins as advertising pieces went the way of malt shops and fins on automobiles.

In 1983, while Earl was on his deathbed in a nursing home, the thing he feared most happened. Someone broke into his home and stole his entire collection of gold pieces and other coins. None of it was ever recovered. The family never told him, and on June 14, 1983, this colorful man passed away quietly of pneumonia.

Searching for Earl's "Lucky Pennies"

OF THE 535 different pieces Earl sold after 1954, all but four carry his name. These four unsigned pieces are attributed to him because 1) they were in his personal collection; 2) they were made using a reverse die typical of his pieces; and 3) in all but one case they were made for repeat customers. Encased coins made after 1954 that do not bear Earl's name most likely are not Fankhauser pieces. However, 104 pieces made before 1955 without Earl's name have been attributed to him because 1) they were found in his personal collection; and 2) they were made using a reverse die typical of his pieces.

Unfortunately, Earl did not keep an example of every piece he had made, nor did he keep any records. There are more undiscovered pieces out there. For the past seven years, I have enjoyed the thrill of the hunt; I suspect you will too. Happy Hunting!

Since his initial astonishment at discovering a Fankhauser piece at a coin show, Bryan Ryker has researched "The Penny Man" and cataloged his encased coins. He may be contacted at 1808 Grey Birch Rd., Ft. Wayne, IN 40804, or via E-mail at encased.coins@juno.com.

TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCES in the 1960s impacted the novelty advertising business in a big way, and encased coins were among the casualties.

In 1960 Earl developed Parkinson's disease, which slowed him down considerably. He quit selling encased coins in 1965, taking only eight orders that year. He ended the way he began, with a piece made for himself. His last piece carried the "new" postal zip code.

Technological advances in the 1960s impacted the novelty advertising business in a big way, and encased coins were among the casualties. The Bic Pen Company developed an inexpensive ball point pen, an instant advertising marvel. Of even greater significance, printed advertising ma-

How Encased Coins Were Made

THE MANUFACTURING PROCESS for an encased coin started off with the making of a simple die from a piece of soft steel turned in a lathe. The lettering was then hammered into the steel. Once the inscription was complete, the die was hardened and polished.

For decades the Osborne Coinage Company used a set of letter punches to hammer the customer's inscription into the die blank, one letter at a time. In the early 1960s, the firm bought a pantograph engraving machine to mill the lettering into the dies.

After die preparation, blank aluminum rings were punched from a coil of strip aluminum. Customers occasionally sent in their own coins for encasing or made special arrangements with the bank. When special coins were used, a second operation was needed to hand-punch non-standard holes into the ring.

The aluminum rings were then cleaned and delivered to the coining press. The hardened dies were loaded into the press, and the operator prepared the setup. Each encased coin was made by hand. The operator loaded an aluminum ring into the press and then inserted the coin, being careful to align it properly. He then engaged the press, unloaded the completed piece and began again. As the press cycled, the bottom die pushed up to free the completed encased coin. The finished pieces were then sent through another wash operation and sometimes given a protective coating of lacquer.

In the process of punching out the aluminum rings, the aluminum strip at times did not feed properly through the press. The die then lined up slightly over the last punching, resulting in a "clipped planchet." Since the operator essentially hand-inspected each ring as he loaded it, examples of encased coins with clipped planchets are hard to find.

The coins themselves occasionally had impurities, and some pieces "de-layered" under the pressure of being clenched, forming lines across the coin. This defect is a little easier to find, but still fairly unusual.

Coins that have been broken out of encasements have an unusual look. In the clenching process, the coin's diameter is reduced and its edge becomes concave. Sometimes the coins buckle. These odd-looking pieces sometimes confound coin collectors who find them in circulation.

When Canadian cents are encased, one side usually appears upside-down in relation to the holder. The press operator typically made his setup for Lincoln cents and would not bother to re-orient the dies when switching over to Canadian cents, whose obverse/reverse rotation is not 180 degrees.

Some customers paid extra to have their pieces made into key rings. It is important to know whether the hole in a piece was made at the factory or added later. (Holes added later are considered to be damage, and greatly reduce the value of the piece.) Holes made at the factory usually go through the clover, and the inscription is shifted to either side of the hole accordingly. Holes added later usually are not as "clean" and typically pierce some part of the horseshoe or inscription.

BY OSBORNE'S STANDARDS, encased coin business involved a lot of customers for little money . . . it was tough to keep the price low on "small" quantities.

own son never was able to get a straight answer from him about where he got them.

In my own investigation, it was the Stork Club piece with the small lettering at the bottom that provided the clue. When I contacted the Osborne Coinage Company, representatives acknowledged the firm had been Earl's supply source. Unfortunately, two years before I made this discovery, Osborne threw away all its dies and records on encased coins. This is especially sad, since Osborne would have had a complete record of every piece Earl ordered, as well as how many of each were produced. A search of the Osborne facility in 1990 uncovered two dies made for Earl that escaped the clean-up, apparently because they were for his solid aluminum pieces, rather than for encased coins.

By Osborne's standards, the encased-coin business involved a lot of customers for little profit. Making the dies required skilled engravers, and it was tough to keep the price low on small quantities. Encased coins were only a minor part of Osborne's business; the firm began making encased coins before World War II and stopped four or five years after Earl stopped selling them in 1965. (Osborne must have felt the loss of Earl's business, since he had been giving the company nearly two orders a week at the time he quit!)

Osborne marketed its encased coins through the Advertising Specialty Group, which published a 3-inch-thick catalog of advertising novelties, including matches, pens, calendars, inexpensive imprinted items and printed material. The firm also put on one or two shows per year.

Because of the vast number of pieces Earl had made with his name on them in the 1950s and 1960s, some collectors mistakenly call all encased coins made by Osborne during that era "Fankhauser pieces." They say Earl's pieces have a certain "look" about them, but are not aware that his source also made encased coins for many other salesmen.

Latter Days

EARL'S RATHER PUBLIC life as a coin collector and dealer in encased coins had its consequences. He was always afraid of being robbed. His children remember that whenever they went on vacations, family members kept their itinerary secret until they returned.

Retirement gave Earl more time to pursue his hobbies, and he kept busy traveling across the country. When traveling by car, he liked stopping at businesses along the way to try to get more orders for lucky pennies. He also enjoyed visiting banks to see what coins they had.

Earl occasionally created his own "calling cards" by counterstamping his initials FEF into cents.

The reverse of this Canadian cent is upside-down in relation to the encasement's design because the holder was set up to house a U.S. cent, which has a different obverse/reverse rotation.

The Osborne Coinage Company disposed of all its dies for encased coins. Fortunately, the die (bottom) for one of Earl's solid aluminum pieces (top) survived.

PERHAPS HIS MOST closely guarded secret was where his encased coins were made. . . . Even his own son never was able to get a straight answer from him . . .

onto them for a few years, he took out ads in Coin World and sold them by the roll. He liked selling them because even if he got just 2 cents each, he doubled his money. (Earl had another, more personal reason for liking pennies: they had Abraham Lincoln's likeness on them. Earl had a life-long fascination for Lincoln, who served as his role model. Throughout his life, Earl collected books on Lincoln. He lived just blocks away from the largest private collection of Lincoln memorabilia in the world, housed at the Lincoln National Life Insurance Company. He planned vacations around visiting various Lincoln historical sites across the country. Earl's grandchildren remember being rewarded for reading books on Lincoln and memorizing portions of speeches and various facts about the President's life.)

In 1953 or 1954, Earl came up with the idea of signing each encased coin he sold. He started by putting his initials right in the inscription. They appear on just six pieces. Soon afterward, he started putting his full name and address in tiny letters at the bottom. Earl was unique in this regard; no other encased coin salesman "signed" the pieces he sold. As a result, his name is well known today among collectors throughout the United States and Europe.

Earl might have gotten the idea from an encased coin he had in his collection. It was made for the Stork Club in New York City by the Osborne Coinage Company of Cincinnati, Ohio. In tiny letters along the lower edge of the brass encasement is OSBORNE COINAGE CIN. O.

A Well-Kept Secret

SINCE EARL WAS a very private individual, many things about him will never be known. Perhaps his most closely guarded secret was where his encased coins were made. Theories abound, but most collectors believe Earl made them himself on his own press. Others believe he teamed up with a local tool and die maker. It is said—incorrectly—that Earl and his partner also made Fort Wayne's bus tokens. People closest to Earl believe he ordered them from a company in Chicago.

Earl probably started many of these rumors himself. He didn't want any competition, and he didn't want his customers going directly to his source of supply. Even his

In 1953 or '54, Earl began putting his initials F.E.F. in the inscription (left). Soon thereafter, he started adding his full name and address, EARL FANKHAUSER FORT WAYNE I, in tiny letters at the bottom of encasements (right).

EARL WAS A top salesman. Over an 18-year period, he took orders for more than 670 different encased coins. His work spanned 29 states . . . 134 towns and cities.

We may never know exactly how Earl first got started selling encased coins, but however it happened, he began this venture in 1948. That year he had two pieces made for himself and began taking orders from various businesses around Fort Wayne. Although he started out slowly, before long he was selling far more encased coins than anyone else in the country.

Selling encased coins was a labor of love for Earl. It matched his personality and lifestyle perfectly. It allowed him to work with coins and keep a hand in doing what he enjoyed most, selling things and making deals with people. Always looking to draw attention to himself, it gave him a sort of notoriety about town. He was "The Penny Man."

Earl was a top salesman. Over an 18-year period, he took orders for more than 670 different encased coins. His work spanned 29 states and the District of Columbia, plus Ontario and Quebec, covering a total of 134 towns and cities. He sold them to car dealers, barber shops, political candidates and shoe stores—to anyone who would listen.

If you placed an order, Earl required payment in advance. He typically charged $12 for 100 pieces, and extra if you wanted something other than a cent in the middle. More was charged for a horseshoe shape or large, round encasement, or for pieces punched for use as a key chain. Most customers just ordered the standard, 32mm round piece with a cent in the center.

Whenever he ran into old customers, he would ask if they needed any more "lucky coins," as he called them, and hand them a post card with his name and address to use for reordering. He often sold encased coins in exchange for goods or services, bartering for shoes for the family, eyeglasses, haircuts—whatever he could get to make a sale.

Throughout the years, Earl had a number of pieces made for himself with his name on them, which he passed out freely. He often left encased coins as tips at restaurants and gave them to prospective customers. He especially liked giving them to children.

Three of his personal pieces were not encased coins at all, but rather solid aluminum pieces. Two pieces were inscribed with season's greetings, another wished sick friends a speedy recovery. Earl had another way of creating calling cards for himself; occasionally he "personalized" coins directly, counterstamping his initials FEF into cents.

Earl acquired new cents in bulk directly from the bank. After holding were no coin dealers in Fort Wayne. People were more than willing to sell their old coins and bills for anything above face value, and Earl picked up many bargains. Unfortunately, with the hard times, he could not afford to keep them.

In 1942 Earl got a job as a general laborer for the Wayne Pump Company, and for the first time his family had a steady source of income. The pay was good at $50 per week, but he hated the factory, preferring to sell and make deals. As a result, Earl led a sort of double life: working in the factory during the day, wheeling and dealing at night.

Once Earl took up selling something, he never really stopped; he just added it to his repertoire. Eventually he was involved in selling just about anything and everything, all the while keeping his regular job at Wayne Pump. He copied photographs, and sold insurance, needles, cars, real estate, antiques, coins, stamps and encased coins.

After a brief engagement, Frederick Earl Fankhauser and Audrie Dessie Coomer (top) were married on June 17, 1924. From 1945 to 1959, the Fankhauser family resided in this house at 2407 Euclid Avenue in Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Encased-Coin Days

ENCASED COINS WERE “invented” near the turn of the century, after the Hall-Héroult process revolutionized the production of aluminum. Since it was economical, strong and could be formed easily in a coining press, aluminum was the perfect metal for this inexpensive advertising medium. Encased coins were popular with small businesses. Some were used as calling cards; others were made up as souvenirs or commemoratives.

The popularity of encased coins grew throughout the first part of the 20th century, but once World War II began, the private coining industry stopped production to conserve metals for the war effort. Manufacturing operations resumed after the war ended.

Encased coins were marketed primarily through traveling salesmen who sold various advertising novelties from catalogs and ordered the custom-made pieces directly from the manufacturer. The sales pitch went something like this: “People don’t throw away money, so they will keep your advertising piece. People will carry your piece in their pockets as a good luck charm because of the horseshoe and good luck wording on the back, and it will be a constant reminder of you. Encased coins are made of metal, so they will last a long time.”

The Penny Man

ENCASED COINS

Peddling encased coins as advertising pieces was a labor of love for Earl Fankhauser, who combined his skill as a salesman with his love of numismatics.

ENCASED CENTS OR, as many people call them, “lucky pennies,” are remembrances of days gone by. You may recall getting them from various businesses in your home town when you were a kid. If you hunt, you still can find them at antique shows and flea markets. Many of these pieces carry the name of Earl Fankhauser, known as “The Penny Man,” who also happened to be my wife’s grandfather. There are many stories about Earl and his “lucky pennies,” but little is known about him outside Fort Wayne, Indiana, where he lived his entire life.

Born on April 5, 1902, Frederick Earl Fankhauser grew up poor and lived much of his life that way. Like his father, he never finished high school. After apprenticing in a machine shop, he worked as a mechanic for several auto dealers and later started up a garage with a friend. From 1922 to 1924, he was employed by Pennell Auto as a car salesman.

About this time, Earl became interested in coins, primarily cents. As treasurer for Centennial Methodist Church, he counted the coins in the collection plates on Sundays. Whenever he saw an Indian Head cent in the plate, he swapped it for a new one.

During the Great Depression, the Fankhauser family lost most of its money through various failed business attempts. Typical of what was happening in the rest of the nation, many businesses in Fort Wayne closed. Insurance companies canceled fire insurance on any building vacant more than six months, and landlords were glad to have any tenant just so they could hold on to their properties.

In this environment, Earl found someone who let him have a storefront on Harrison Street for a percentage of his earnings. For a year or so, Earl sold furniture and antiques there and, with a sign in the window, also advertised OLD COINS BOUGHT AND SOLD. At the time, there of the figure is outstretched in bestowal of the spirit of liberty." In other words, she is blessing the world, conferring a benediction of liberty upon it. And yet, with the same gesture, she could be greeting the dawn of a new day. Regardless, the obverse conveys a subtle power.

The reverse offers a similar juxtaposition of grace and strength. The eagle's wings are not "unfolded," as many references maintain, but rather half folded ("addorsed," in heraldic terms). The eagle may be preparing for flight, or it may have just landed. In either case, the composition implies powerful and compelling motion.

In Search of the Perfect Specimen

AS LOVELY AS its design was, the Walker was still the object of reworking. The original issue had the mintmark on the obverse—the first time since 1838. On February 14, 1917, the mintmark was ordered to be moved to the reverse, a change that was effected in April. The revision did not require a new hub because mintmarks typically were added to the dies after they were hubbed.

The Mint did create new hubs in 1918, when Chief Engraver George T. Morgan revised the collar of Liberty's gown. In 1937 Chief Engraver John R. Sinnock reworked the sun's rays. The following year, the Mint created another new hub with a slew of minor changes to the hair, the oak branch (although apparently not the laurel) and the drapery on Liberty's arm. None of these revisions is apparent on common, circulated specimens and may not be obvious even on uncirculated examples.

However, as a result of its production history, the Walking Liberty half dollar has two different "looks." In high grade, early coins have a somewhat satiny or matte-like appearance. Their good depth of field creates an almost three-dimensional effect. On the other hand, later coins seem "flatter," but more brilliant, with lots of mint luster.

Nearly 500 million Walkers were struck within 30 years, a level of production that makes perfect coins hard to find. Anyone seeking high-grade examples must be tolerant and patient.

On a well-struck coin, the hair below Liberty's cap should be rounded, not flat. Her forehead, cheek and ear should be easily differentiated. Also, Liberty's right hand must show fully defined fingers. The most visible separation is between the thumb and index finger (a perfect specimen will show definition between the index and middle fingers as well). On the reverse, the eagle's breast should be fully rounded.

The Walking Liberty series ended in 1947; the Franklin half dollar

This half dollar, grading Very Good (VG) to Fine (F), shows moderate to heavy wear. In Fine grade, coins dated before 1921 show only half the stripes in Liberty's gown; on those dated 1921 and later, all the stripes are clear. This particular specimen is valued at $16 to $35.

Some critics thought the eagle on the reverse of the Walking Liberty half dollar looked more like a turkey than a symbol of power.

Neither the 1916 nor the 1917 reports from the director of the Mint alluded to any problems in production. However, internal documents, and the eight pattern pieces that survive, indicate the half dollar was a challenge to produce. The Mint eventually resolved whatever problems it had, and halves dated 1916 were struck in 1917, with specimens of the new coins appearing at the American Numismatic Society in New York in January, courtesy of the United States Treasury Department.

A New Standard for Coinage Design

THE NUMISMATIST was eloquent in its praise, calling the new pieces "the most attractive set of silver coins ever issued by this or any other Government." Weinman's design was fully faithful to former President Theodore Roosevelt's desire to create an American coinage as beautiful as that of ancient Greece. In the words of author and scholar Cornelius Vermeule:

The "Walking Liberty" design particularly gives the true feeling for breadth and sculptural surfaces on the scale of a coin. These surfaces are formal, like a well-carved marble or precisely cast bronze relief for a war memorial. The rising sun amid the landscape anchors the motion of Liberty, her olive branch and her starry cloak.

In its July 1916 edition, The Numismatist commented on the design of the half dollar, taking the description virtually verbatim from a May 30 announcement by Secretary W.G. McAdoo:

The Walker has been my favorite U.S. coin for as long as I can remember. The Walking Liberty half dollar has greater mass than other circulating coins of its time, and is made of good silver. To me, the Walker represents great art AND good money—neither of which circulates today.

—Frank Lessa

The obverse of the half-dollar bears a full length figure of Liberty with a background of the American flag flying to the breeze. The Goddess is striking toward the dawn of a new day, carrying laurel and oak branches, symbolic of civic duty and military glory. The reverse shows an eagle perched high up on a mountain crag, wings unfolded. Growing from a rift in the rock is a sapling of mountain pine, symbolic of America.

One point that does not find ready consensus is the use of the flag. The first announcements describe the flag as "flying to the breeze," but simple observation tells us that Liberty may very well be wearing the flag. The "stripes" in her skirt are, by their classic heraldic rendering, red. The upper half of her abundant garment, decorated with stars, serves as a shawl or cape.

The Mint's annual report noted that "the hand changing times, the first cracks appeared in the edifice of Victorian morality. The corseted "Gibson Girl" of the 1890s was about to become the "flapper" of the 1920s.

No one had seen Miss Liberty's cleavage on coinage since the early 1800s; now she was bare-breasted on the quarter and thinly veiled on the half dollar. The very fact that she was walking was relatively new (Saint-Gauden's Liberty on the $20 having blazed the trail in 1908). Previously, heads and busts had dominated U.S. coinage, an exception being the static Seated Liberty design introduced in the late 1830s.

A Difficult Beginning

UNLIKE MOST UNITED STATES coins, the new issues of 1916 featured designs chosen through open competition. On March 3, 1916, Chief Engraver Charles Barber received official notice from Robert W. Wooley, director of the Mint, that Adolph A. Weinman's design for the half dollar was selected to replace Barber's work. Naturally, there was friction, but Weinman took the opportunity to be gracious. He admitted there were differences of opinion between Barber and him, brushing them off as "artistic temperament." (In truth, conflict between Barber and Weinman was inevitable. Weinman was a student of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, who had clashed with Barber over the production of the $20 gold coin.)

The July 1916 issue of The Numismatist reported the impending release of the new half dollar, quarter and dime, stating that "they will probably be issued soon after July 1, the beginning of the new fiscal year." However, the following month, The Numismatist informed readers that "the coinage of the quarters and half dollars may not begin until fall." In the September issue, it was stated, "It now seems probable that coins of the new designs will not be issued for some little time, possibly not until 1917," and in October the journal reported that the new silver coinage was "indefinitely postponed."

Echoing the problems with the $20 gold pieces, the report in the October 1916 issue noted:

The reason given for the postponement is said to be that much trouble has been encountered in preparing the dies, and that the same difficulty presents itself whenever designs are made by artists outside the mint not familiar with the mechanical problems to be solved.

The Numismatist concluded with a moral tag in support of allowing the Mint to do its job, rather than bringing in outside artists.

The Walking Liberty half reminds me of the time that America was reaching out to the world to spread the concept of democracy. We were active participants in a changing world order. I inherited several nice Walkers from my grandparents, and although they're not worth much, they're invaluable to me.

Weinman's Walking Liberty (top) was predated by Oscar Roty's La Semeuse ("The Sower"), which debuted on French coinage in 1897. The similarities between the two designs are striking.

In Praise of Walking Liberty

Though not likely to raise eyebrows in today's world, the design of the Walking Liberty half dollar stirred public controversy in post-Victorian America.

by Michael E. Marotta
ANA 162953

MANY PEOPLE BELIEVE that the Walking Liberty half dollar, struck from 1916 to 1947, is America's most beautiful coin. Only the Saint-Gaudens $20 gold piece competes for that kind of praise. But, it wasn't always so.

When the "Walker" first appeared, criticism was more common than appreciation. In the 25 years before the coin's introduction, Americans had grown accustomed to the Romanesque, androgynous face of Liberty on the series of coins designed by Charles Barber.

The half dollar, quarter and dime shared the same obverse, and the reverse of the half and quarter were nearly identical. Furthermore, from 1892 to 1915, commerce generally was brisk and money passed quickly from hand to hand, wearing away what few appreciable details the Barber coins had.

By contrast, the new coinage of 1916 was bold and startling. Not everyone liked what they saw. Some suggested that Liberty's toes were being burned by the setting sun. Others thought the eagle appeared to be wearing overalls or that it came across as less than defiant, more like a turkey than our national symbol.

Roaring into the Twenties

IN THE EARLY 1900s, Americans enjoyed the first automobiles and moving pictures. But the first decades of the 20th century also were marked by stock-market panics, labor unrest and horrifying war. With the

Basketball Commems Lead Olympic Sales

Sales of clad half dollars commemorating the sport of basketball in the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta outpaced all other Olympic commemorative coins issued by the United States Mint, according to the Mint's two-year sales records through October 17, 1996. Nearly 336,500 Olympic basketball commemorative coins were sold in proof and uncirculated conditions.

The Olympic baseball coins were the second best sellers, with more than 278,000 sold. The third-place finisher in the Mint's race for Olympic coin sales was the silver dollar honoring gymnastics, with more than 213,000 coins sold.

Leading sales among the Olympic gold commemorative coins was one featuring a torch runner, with nearly 70,000 sold. The Mint reported total sales of 2.2 million Olympic commemorative coins, generating $93 million in sales revenue and surcharges of more than $23 million.

Silver Production is Forecast to Increase

Silver production worldwide is expected to rise through the year 1999, according to The Silver Institute. A 2-percent increase was expected for 1996, followed by 4- and 5-percent increases this year and next, and a 3-percent production rise in 1999.

If the projections are met, Australian production will outpace that of the United States, currently the world's third largest silver supplier. Mexico is expected to remain the prime silver producer, selling 93.4 million ounces a year by 1999. Peru will remain second in production throughout the next four years. The United States is projected to mine 54.8 million ounces in 1999, up from the 50 million produced in 1995. •

Changes in U.S. Mint Positions Announced

The four superintendent positions at the United States Mint now are held by career professionals rather than political appointees, and the four assayer jobs and the position of chief engraver have been eliminated. This action by Treasury Secretary Robert E. Rubin concludes a plan initiated in 1993 by his predecessor, Lloyd Bentsen.

"For the past three years, the Mints have been run by career professionals," Rubin explained in making the appointments last October. "The Mints in Denver and Philadelphia received the President's National Partnership Award [in 1996]. We are proud of their achievements and look forward to more of the same."

Named as Mint superintendents on October 17, 1996, were:

- Philadelphia—Augustine A. Albino, who began his career as chief cost accountant at the Philadelphia Mint in 1961, and served as acting deputy superintendent from 1993-96 and as deputy superintendent since August 2, 1996.
- Denver—Raymond J. "Jack" DeBroekert, who started as a machinist at the Philadelphia Mint in 1970 and has served as acting superintendent at the Denver Mint since July 25, 1993.

- San Francisco—Dale B. DeVries, who was a senior operations manager for the McDonnell Douglas Corporation in St. Louis, Missouri, before being named deputy superintendent of the San Francisco Mint on September 12, 1996.

- West Point—Bradford E. Cooper, who was chief operating officer for the U.S. Controls Corporation before being named deputy superintendent of the West Point facility on August 2, 1996.

ANA Executive Director Lends His Expertise to Public Television

A television news crew from Germany recently interviewed ANA Executive Director Robert J. Leuver for a story on economic espionage. Jo Auyevev, producer of the piece for Germany's WBR television network—similar to the United States' Public Broadcasting System (PBS)—said the idea of engaging in espionage and even warfare through economic means is an intriguing subject in Europe. As part of this examination, Auyevev and reporter Rico Carisch looked into currency counterfeiting, especially of United States paper money, for a program to be aired this spring.

Leuver, who served as director of the U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing from 1982 to 1988 and oversaw the initial plans to redesign our nation's paper money, was asked about the new $100 notes introduced early last year. He acknowledged that counterfeiting long has been a form of economic warfare, citing efforts by Germany, Great Britain and the United States during World War II. "Nazi Germany's 'Operation Bernhard' was one of the best such efforts, producing about $600 million worth of perfect British currency in an effort to destroy England's fragile wartime economy," Leuver said. "In the last several years, several allegations have been made about a similar type of counterfeiting effort against United States currency by Middle Eastern nations."

Leuver explained to the German news team that Iran, during and after the Shah's control, had purchased the same type of printing presses the United States uses—intaglio presses produced by De La Rue Giori of Switzerland.

The German reporters, however, were pursuing leads that some of those presses allegedly were sold to a German papermaking and printing plant manufacturer, Giesecke & Devrient, which sold them to a third party that, in turn, sent the presses to Iran and then to Syria. The news crew hopes to trace the story to the Middle East.

This is the third time Leuver has been interviewed for national television programs in connection with counterfeiting of U.S. currency. In 1992 the PBS program NOVA aired an examination on the subject entitled "How to Make a Dishonest Buck." In October of this year, NOVA followed up with a second program entitled "Secrets of Making Money," again calling upon his expertise.

British Royal Mint Plans Another Big Year

The British Royal Mint (BRM) set an all-time production record last year and plans for similar successes in 1997. Roger Holmes, deputy master, reports that the BRM produced 3.7 billion circulating coins and export blanks, including 1.3 billion circulating domestic coins and a 10-percent increase in collector and special memento coins.

In his annual report, Holmes noted that the British Royal Mint manufactured coins and blanks for a record 82 countries, up from the 74 nations served in the previous fiscal year. The Mint's new overseas customers included Albania, Belarus, Benin, Cuba, Honduras, Latvia, Macedonia and Moldova.

Coming up this year is a new, smaller 50-pence piece; a new, bimetallic £2 coin; a coin commemorating the golden wedding anniversary of Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip; and a series of new coins for Hong Kong, which will return to mainland China control this year.

Bullish Coin Market to Continue in 1997

California coin dealer David Hall reports the coin market left its bearish hibernation last year and predicts it will run with the bulls in 1997. In a recent newsletter, Hall says, "Top quality rare coins are up anywhere from 15 to 30 percent."

He adds that the most important month of the year is August, when the ANA convention traditionally is held. The coin market shifted dramatically at the ANA's 105th Anniversary Convention in Denver last year, according to Hall. Rather than starting strong and then trailing off throughout the show, as it had in the bear mode since 1989, "This year's ANA started with a flurry . . . and literally got stronger every day."

Hall's bright coin-market forecast is based on a number of factors, including an upturn in the cyclical

NEW ISSUES

GREAT BRITAIN: Behind Enemy Lines: The Gulf War Collection

"Behind Enemy Lines," the British Royal Mint's newly released Gulf War Collection, includes a gold sovereign actually carried by British Special Forces during the Gulf War, together with dress miniature replicas of the Gulf War medal and the Kuwait Liberation medal. Britain's Ministry of Defence confirms that 16,289 sovereigns remained uncaptured after the war and were returned by military personnel upon completion of their missions. The total number of sets available, therefore, is limited to 16,289.

Because it is recognized around the world, the sovereign became an ideal coin for barter; they were included in survival kits of Special Operations Executive (SOE) agents in World War II. Ian Fleming's James Bond novels suggest that the sovereign played a role in international espionage. During the Gulf War, British service personnel at risk of being stranded behind enemy lines were issued 20 sovereigns per man to buy food, shelter and safe conduct.

The Gulf War medal was awarded for 30 days' continuous service in the defined Area of Operations from August 2, 1990, through March 7, 1991. It was awarded "with clasp" for 7 days' continuous service during Desert Storm (January 16 to February 28, 1991) and to members of the Kuwait Liaison Team who were in Kuwait on August 2, 1990, the date of the Iraqi invasion. The Kuwait Liberation medal was awarded as a mark of gratitude by the Kuwait government to recipients of the Gulf medal "with clasp."

The sovereign and medals in the Gulf War Collection are accompanied by an informative brochure and a numbered certificate of authenticity signed by General Sir Peter de la Billiere, Commander British Forces, Middle East, during the conflict. The collection is available for $324 from the British Royal Mint, P.O. Box 772570, Woodside, NY 11377-2570, telephone toll-free 800/221-1215. (New York residents should add sales tax.)

The British Royal Mint's new Gulf War Collection comprises a gold sovereign that actually was carried by a member of British Special Forces at risk of being stranded behind enemy lines during the conflict. Also included is a Gulf War medal and a Kuwait Liberation medal.

Israel pays tribute to its assassinated prime minister Yitzhak Rabin on gold and silver commemorative coins.

ISRAEL: First 1-Ounce Gold Coin Observes Anniversary of Rabin's Death

A 1-ounce gold coin, the first in Israel's history, and two sterling silver coins commemorate the first anniversary of the assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. The three coins share a design featuring a portrait of a stern-visaged Rabin by sculptor Avraham Pat, with the legend "Yitzhak Rabin 1922-1995" in English and Hebrew.

Mintage of the proof 20-sheqel gold coin (35mm) is limited to 1,999 pieces; it is priced at $750. The proof 2 sheqalim (38.7mm, 28.8g) and brilliant-uncirculated 1 sheqel (30mm, 14.4g) are priced at $41 and $24, respectively. Also available is a two-piece silver set.

Rus. The trident crest (seen on the coins) of the ruling Rus family eventually became the emblem of Kievan-Rus; it is today the Ukrainian coat of arms.

Rus was absorbed by Lithuania in the 14th century, and Lithuania eventually merged with Poland to form the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth (16th century). It was in the latter half of the 17th and throughout the 18th century that Muscovy gradually annexed most of what was Rus and is today Ukraine. (It was at this time that Peter I began to call his empire "Russia" in order to extend the heritage of his state back 350 years to the founding of Rus.)

In summary: 1) it is not correct to link medieval Rus with Russia; 2) the various coins and rulers illustrated in the article are those of Rus (ancient Ukraine) not Russia and; 3) there was no "strange," 300-year, coinless period in "Russian" economic history (from the 11th to 14th centuries) since the entity that would become Russia (i.e., Muscovy) was not founded until the 13th century, and coinage was introduced much later.

Correction

The November 1996 installment of Edward C. Rochette's "Other Side of the Coin" ("Murder Most Unconventional," p. 1346) contained some misinformation as a result of a production error. The second paragraph should read: "The convention site, the Marriott Hotel at Los Angeles International Airport, was not originally picked for the ANA's show. Earlier, the ANA had booked Westin's Century Plaza Hotel, which had committed 900 of its 650 rooms and 40,000 of its ballroom's 28,500 square feet. The commitment was based on Century Plaza officials' plans to build an additional tower and have it completed in advance of the convention."

Reader "Privy" to More Info

I enjoyed Barbara J. Gregory's article "The Royal Flush" in the October Numismatist (p. 1206). It made me go to my shelves and re-read a book given to me years ago by an English friend. Temples of Convenience, by Lucinda Lamberton (New York: St. Martin's Press, Library of Congress catalog no. 78-60787), is a history of indoor plumbing and contains an extensive bibliography along with beautiful color illustrations.

The article also inspired me to locate an old medal in my collection. I believe it is listed in Medicina in Nummis by Horatio R. Storer, which is in the ANA Resource Center. The obverse shows a physician giving an enema with an old-fashioned clyster, and on the reverse the physician is resting on his clyster while the patient sits on a chamber pot. This silver medal appears to be hand-carved rather than struck.

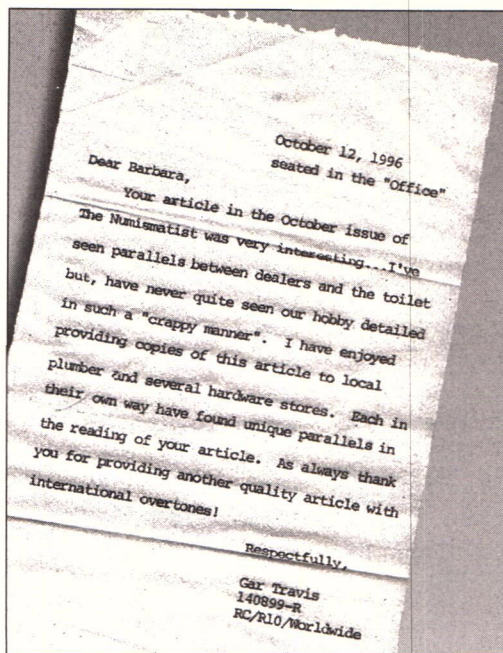

I hope that Ms. Gregory will continue to contribute more interesting articles in the future.

"Coins of Russia" Elicits Comments

I recently was given a copy of the article "Early, Short-Lived Coins of Russia" by Nick Gluschenko (October Numismatist, p. 1211) and must say I was disappointed by the many errors throughout the piece. I will highlight only some of the most glaring misstatements.

The very premise that the territory of Rus is the "Russia-to-be" is wrong. Ancient Kievan-Rus was the forerunner of the state known today as century, and coinage was introduced there in the 14th century. The "Russian" monetary system has a 600- (not 1,000-) year history.

Rus was a Slavic federation heavily infiltrated by Varangian (eastern Viking) warrior-merchant chiefs who initially set themselves up as leaders of various Slavic groups (particularly around Kiev), but who were soon as-simulated by the locals. The Slavic-Norse entity that emerged and that dominated Eastern Europe for 350 years is what we today call Kievan-

Ukraine. "Russia" is a name given by Czar Peter I to the Muscovite Empire in the early 18th century. Muscovy was not founded until the 13th

The Year That Was and Will Be

GRUMPY DOOMSAYERS TO the contrary, numismatics certainly appears to be alive and well, judging from the amazing events that happened in 1996.

Famous Auction: The Eliasberg specimen of the 1913 Liberty nickel shattered records when it was sold for $1.48 million by Auctions by Bowers and Merena. Winning bidder Jay Parrino now is offering $1 million to purchase a lesser-grade companion '13 Liberty nickel unaccounted for since 1962. Parrino may be attempting to complete a set of cufflinks.

Infamous Auction: Despite opposition from some Omaha, Nebraska, residents, the Byron Reed Collection—donated to the city in the last century—was sold at auction by Spink America. Although the majority of Omaha residents may have asked, “Byron who?,” the auction disposed of some of the city’s heritage while ironically raising about $6 million for its Western Heritage Museum.

ANA: The ANA’s 105th Anniversary Convention attracted large crowds of smiling faces in Denver and in Colorado Springs. The Denver smiles were due to the excellent convention program and busy bourse floor; the Colorado Springs grins were prompted by ANA Board members wearing aprons and slinging food for the hundreds of Membership Appreciation Day guests.

Congress: The non-collecting legislators approved seven new commemorative coin programs, which, coupled with previously approved packages, will result in the striking of at least 20 different, non-circulating commemorative coins over the next three years. If plans for a series of 50 circulating commemorative quarters are approved, the annual mintage will rise to 4,278 different coins—if you include the platinum, titanium and fool’s gold versions of each series.

Public Awareness: The Bureau of Engraving and Printing issued the new $100 bill; the Mint donated and the ANA distributed 40,000 coin collecting “starter kits”; the Professional Numismatists Guild distributed 120,000 free Pennyboards™; and Random House began selling the “Coin Hunter Kit.” These programs must be working. How else can you account for the fact that at the close of 1996, virtually everyone in America above the age of 7 was believed to be handling money most every day of the week.

A LOOK IN my semi-prooflike crystal ball reveals what’s ahead for numismatics in '97.

Famous Auction: Although more than $100 gazillion worth of his coins have been sold in the past decade, still more items from the Louis E. Eliasberg Sr. Collection will be available, including the rare “Politician’s Proof,” an unusual coin that is two-faced and one-sided.

Infamous Auction: A hoard of “numismatic investment” sales literature will be uncovered. Rather than destroy the documents because they are obsolete, outdated and misleading, the owner of the materials will sell them to the highest telemarketing bidder.

ANA: Faced with a limited-space bourse of only 284 tables for the upcoming 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City, the ANA Board will vote to hold the show over three consecutive weekends in the Big Apple, thus hoping to establish a record with an 852-table bourse.

Congress: The commemorative coin program feeding frenzy will continue on Capitol Hill, with special-interest groups successfully persuading Congress to approve dozens of additional, questionable programs, most of them eliciting yawns from knowledgeable collectors. Overwhelmed by so many new issues, Whitman Coin Products, publisher of the annual “Red Book,” will produce a special supplement devoted to modern commemorative coins. It will be known by the distinctive and appropriate colors of its cover, the “Black and Blue Book.”

Public Awareness: The ANA, the Professional Numismatists Guild and the U.S. Mint will join forces with Hollywood to create a persuasive campaign aimed at increasing public awareness of U.S. numismatic history. The results will include: An episode of Frasier, where the psychiatrist brothers argue the Freudian connotations of Bust dollars; an episode of Baywatch, where there already is plenty of Bust-type viewing; and the shows NYPD Blue and Murphy Brown, which will be renamed NYPD Blue Book and Murphy Brown & Dunn.

You read it here first.

A Call for Nominations of Officers

ONE OF MY special duties—in fact, one of my most important duties—as ANA President is to make a call for nominations of officers for the 1997-99 term. The new officers will be sworn in during the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City this summer. The nomination process runs through March 31. This, then, is an appeal for every dedicated ANA member to give serious consideration to what it means to serve as an officer in the Association. Is this something you may have wanted to do for some time, but have put off? If so, now may be just the time to roll up your sleeves and get into the political arena.

If you have ever served as an officer in a local or regional club, you have some idea of what is involved in being part of a management team. Leading the ANA is somewhat different. Its officers must oversee not only a not-for-profit organization, but also an entity as large as a major business. The nine governors who direct activities of the Association look after an annual budget of nearly $3 million, and the welfare of some 30 employees and nearly 28,000 members.

If you personally are not interested in running for the ANA Board, perhaps you know someone you would like to back as a candidate. Either way, this is the time to think seriously about your elected officials. Decide who you want to run the Association and what you can do to get them elected. The first step in this direction is to learn all you can about what the Board does and how the election process works.

To see what is required of officers, read the official

FROM YOUR
.....
BY KENNETH BRESSETT

association, which the executive director and staff carry out. They meet two or three times each year to approve a budget and see that management is performing according to directions. Governors also make appearances at various numismatic functions to represent the Association, decide on the time and place for ANA conventions, and mediate disputes between members.

You also should read the Board Members Code of Ethics, also found in the January 1996 issue (p. 124). The code governs their conduct in various situations.

Officers are elected every odd-numbered year to serve a two-year term. Each may serve a total of no more than five terms or ten years. Election is by secret ballot to fill the positions of president, vice president and seven governors. A candidate for office must be a member in good standing and receive nominations from at least five clubs and five individual members. No member may nominate himself/herself.

The official call for nominations and complete instructions about how to file as a candidate for office can be found in the November 1996 issue of The Numismatist (p. 1297), and reminders appear in this and the December issue. Nominations must be made no later than March 31, 1997. Nomination forms and guidelines are available from the Association's headquarters by fax (719/634-4085), telephone (719/632-2646) or World Wide Web (<http://www.money.org>).

If you have no burning interest in running for office or in nominating someone else, you still have an obligation to take part in the election process. Every ANA member can and should vote for the candidate(s) of their choice. It is up to the membership to select those candidates who will do the best job of running their Association. Be sure to study the platform, record and potential of each candidate for office. Be part of the electorate that will bring continued accomplishment to the Association. •

ANA President Kenneth Bressett (LM 369) will step down from his position with the installation of new officers in August. He began his service on the ANA Board as a governor in 1989; he was elected vice president in 1993 and president in 1995. He cites the adoption of term limits as one of the most significant changes of his tenure because it enhances the opportunities for new candidates to be elected to the ANA Board of Governors.

A stylized, handwritten signature of Kenneth Bressett.

The American Numismatic Association (ANA), an educational, nonprofit organization, is the largest and most active numismatic body in the world. It invites and welcomes to membership all persons who have a sincere interest in numismatics, whether they collect coins, paper money, tokens or medals, whether advanced collectors or those only generally interested in the subject. The ANA was founded in 1891, and claims more than 27,000 members from every state in the Union and many foreign countries. The Association's official journal, The Numismatist, was first published in 1888 by Dr. George F. Heath. Chartered for 50 years by an Act of Congress in 1912 and renewed in perpetuity by an Act of Congress on April 10, 1962, the ANA is a mutual organization for the benefit of its members.

Considered by many to be one of the most beautiful examples of American coinage, the Walking Liberty half dollar did not meet with overwhelming approval when it was introduced in 1916 (page 30).

ANA PHOTO ARCHIVES

Collecting coins for their historic and aesthetic value is a centuries-old hobby. However, modern-day numismatists have discovered that wisely purchased coins also can be practical, long-term investments (page 49).

Often misidentified as errors or very worn coins, die adjustment strikes are rare byproducts of the minting process (page 43).

AN AMAZING FIND!

Mint Bag of 1926 $10 Gold Pieces!

Sometimes dazzling things happen in the rare coin business, and recently this occurred when a group of 1,000 lustrous Mint State 1926 $10 pieces came to light! These coins had been stored for many years in a bank vault, and, so far as we know, have never been seen by numismatists!

The pieces were sent to PCGS, and we were given first choice at these lustrous coins once they had been certified. As might be expected from coins stored for a long time in a bag, most pieces graded MS-60, or MS-61. Then there were a few MS-62 coins—and very few MS-63 coins. We elected to acquire the MS-62 coins, for we felt that these offered an excellent combination of grade and value.

Certified by PCGS, each piece is brilliant, sparkling, and lustrous, and is priced at what we believe you will find to be a great value at...

just $495

THE LOUIS E. ELIASBERG SR. COLLECTION

Sunday, April 6 through Tuesday, April 8 — New York City

1996 WAS A LANDMARK YEAR IN NUMISMATICS!

The first coin ever to cross the auction block over the million dollar mark brought worldwide attention to the unsurpassed quality and diversity of the Louis E. Eliasberg Sr. Collection and the unique accomplishment of this man. When the 1913 Liberty Head nickel sold for $1,485,000, onlookers witnessed an accomplishment that will be remembered forever in the numismatic community. The realization for this portion of the cabinet was $11.6 million.

THIS BRINGS US TO 1997

The Final Part of the Eliasberg Collection

Once again, the remarkable Eliasberg Collection will be the highlight of the auction year. This sale will bring a close to an era by offering the final section of the only complete collection of United States coins ever formed.

The staff of Auctions by Bowers and Merena, Inc. is now preparing the deluxe Grand Format™ color-illustrated catalogue which will describe United States coins of the 20-cents, 25-cents, 50-cents, silver dollar, and trade dollar series, as well as an important offering of United States paper money, a selection of 19th-century American tokens, and a group of gem-quality U.S. commemoratives.

Highlights, to name just a few include, a splendid Mint State example of the prized 1876-CC 20-cent piece, one of just five known 1873-CC quarter dollars without arrows at date, in splendid Mint State. In the half dollar series 1838-O stands as one of America's most famous rarities and the 1853-O without arrows and rays is one of just three known of that issue.

Also featured is the most famous of all United States coins, the 1804 silver dollar. Of the 15 known specimens, the most acclaimed over the years has been this coin, the Stickney specimen obtained directly from the U.S. Mint by exchange on May 9, 1843.

THE AUCTION DATES ARE SET!

Sunday April 6 through Tuesday April 8, 1997. The St. Moritz Hotel, Central Park South, in New York City will be site of this once-in-a-lifetime event, the same venue as used for the previous Eliasberg Collection sales.

A cordial invitation is extended for the community of numismatists and other connoisseurs to participate.

Catalogues, estimated to be over 200 pages in length and extensively illustrated, will be available for $40 for advance order, or automatically as part of a $95 subscription to all Bowers and Merena periodicals for the year 1997.

Cleveland Convention Is Fast Approaching

THOSE OF YOU who attended the 105th Anniversary Convention in Denver last August will remember what a great show it was. I have heard many comments about it being one of the best ever and certainly one that will be hard to surpass. Now it is time to do it again, and I am confident our next show also will set new standards of excellence.

The ANA National Money Show will be held in Cleveland, Ohio, on March 20-22. (For those of you who have been ANA members for a few years, you will realize the name of this annual gathering has evolved over the years. "National Money Show" better describes the type of event it is.) The ANA has not sponsored a convention in Cleveland since 1964, and this one promises to make up for the long absence. Cleveland is a great host city for coin collectors. It has an enthusiastic local committee and excellent facilities. Cleveland claims more collectors within a 400-mile radius than can any other metropolitan area in the country.

The Cleveland Convention Center is home for this numismatic happening. You can still reserve accommodations at the adjacent headquarters hotels: The Renaissance Cleveland Hotel and the Sheraton Cleveland City Centre. Additional details about housing and registration are given on page 164 of this issue. For special concerns, you can contact the ANA Convention Department, telephone 719/632-2646 or fax 719/634-4085.

You will enjoy your stay in the revitalized city of Cleveland. It has changed dramatically in the past few years and is now billed as the "New American City." There are many things to do and see in the area, from the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame Museum and the RainForest exhibit at the Cleveland Metroparks Zoo to the Cleveland Museum of Art. The numerous new shops and restaurants at the downtown Galleria mall will be particularly appealing to those who want to take a break from the numismatic activities.

FROM YOUR PRESIDENT

BY KENNETH BRESSETT

Collectors will be surprised by the giant bourse area and vast array of coins, tokens and paper money. There will be educational programs and other activities all day long. Be sure to take part in the open meetings of the ANA Board of Governors, during which presentations will be made regarding selection of sites for future ANA conventions. You also will want to sit in on the Candidates' Forum for those members seeking election to the ANA Board of Governors. You will meet the candidates; learn about their platforms and proposals for the future of your Association; and determine for yourself how to cast your vote in the coming election. This is a unique opportunity to learn about your organization, and hear its leaders' plans to carry numismatics forward into the next century. The forum will be open to all, so plan to attend.

The Cleveland convention hopefully will feature a citywide competition for local schoolchildren to design a coin or medal with a theme of peace. At the convention in Tucson last year, this competition was very successful in generating interest in coin collecting among young art students. Designs will be submitted for judging, and the winner will receive national recognition and a monetary award.

Speaking of that great show in Tucson last spring, many of you will remember the fun we all had at the informal fiesta/barbecue. It was certainly one of the social events of the year. We are planning a similar get-together with a flavor only Cleveland can offer. I can safely say this will be one of the big features of the National Money Show, and something you cannot afford to miss.

Mark March 20-22 on your calendar. I hope to see each of you in Cleveland.

ANA President Kenneth Bressett (LM 369) devised the Candidates' Forum to introduce members seeking election to the ANA Board. At the first forum, held in Atlanta in 1995, 14 candidates participated in a lively discussion of platforms, promises and needs. From that group emerged the Board members who have led the ANA for the past two years. Now it is time to begin examining your choices for this year's election.

Commemorative Reform Is Moving Along!

WITH THE PASSAGE of seven new commemorative coin programs late last year, many find it difficult to make "heads or tails" of efforts under way to reform the nation's commemorative coin program. Pessimists are vocal as usual, characterizing the situation as "politics as usual" and bemoaning the number of programs still in the hopper. (See "Heads or Tails" in the November 1996 issue of The Numismatist, p. 1284.)

In reality, these new programs, more than anything, demonstrate the progress the Citizens Commemorative Coin Advisory Committee (CCCAC) has made in bringing control and order to the commemorative process. The average maximum mintages for new programs scheduled for the next three years are less than 1.2 million coins per year, versus an average maximum mintage of 12 million coins annually during the last three years. This 90-percent reduction in mintage levels means a sharp reduction in the number of coins entering the market and clearly shows the effect the CCCAC has had on Congressional thinking.

But the CCCAC, in fact, has been successful from its beginning in 1994, supporting the requested moratorium on additional commemorative programs requested by former Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen in August of that year. Until the recent programs were authorized, only one new commemorative bill was passed.

This milestone illustrates another major achievement of the committee—its ability to gain and hold the attention of the chairmen and ranking members of the Subcommittee on Domestic and International Monetary Policy of the House Banking and Financial Services Committee, and the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs. The CCCAC's strong relationship and effective communication with House Chairman Michael N. Castle, in particular, was especially important in the passage of commemorative coin reform legislation by the 104th Congress.

The new law stops the escalation in surcharges that had risen as high as $50 for gold coins and $15 for silver coins, limiting surcharges in the seven programs recently enacted to $35 for gold coins and $10 for silver coins; allows the Mint to withhold surcharges until commemorative programs have been completed, with benefiting organizations being paid after the Mint has recovered the program costs (if necessary, the Mint may retain a portion of the surcharges to cover program costs); and requires financial audits of sponsoring organizations to certify that matching funds have been committed by private sources before surcharges are released.

But with sales of 1996 commemoratives at record lows, the toll of weak themes and excessive mintages still is starkly evident. As chairman of the CCCAC, I can say committee members are proud of the progress made, but more needs to be done this year if Congress is to stay on the course the committee has set.

First, the CCCAC recommends a moratorium on enactment of any additional commemorative coin programs for 1997 through 1999. At the end of the last session of Congress (October 1996), 11 programs were pending. The committee believes restraint in enacting additional coin programs is the most significant contribution Congress can make in 1997 to the recovery of the commemorative coin market.

Secondly, the CCCAC endorses a commemorative coin program for the year 2000 with no surcharge attached. This silver dollar, with a maximum mintage of 500,000, will be dedicated to the cause of peace. Consistent with earlier recommendations, the advisory committee believes action on this program should await the first session of the 106th Congress (1999).

For years the Mint has echoed the same theme in testimony before Congress, urging fewer coin programs and lower mintage limits. Remarkably, Congress is now listening to this small group of private citizens appointed to control a runaway train that a few years ago showed no signs of slowing down. •

FDR's Far-Reaching Legacy Extended to the Philippines

Tim Lobstein's article, "The Numismatic Legacy of FDR," in the November 1996 issue (p. 1308) prompted me to write. As a collector of foreign coins produced by the United States Mint, I encountered a Philippine peso, dated 1936, with conjoined portraits of U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Philippines President Manuel Quezon.

Now, the really interesting part is that this United States currency is denominated in pesos. The coin carries an "M" mintmark for Manila, where the United States set up a mint in 1920. Thus, this legal-tender U.S. coinage actually pictured a living American president. I wonder how many collectors of U.S. coins have thought to include this piece in their collections?

Ancient Geographers Likely Exaggerated Sizes of Landmasses

Mark McMenemy, in his article "Cartography on Carthaginian Gold Staters" (November 1996, p. 1315), identifies markings on Carthaginian gold staters as maps and suggests that a western island appearing on those maps may represent an area in the Americas. Given the resounding silence of ancient geographers concerning the New World, let me suggest two more realistic possibilities.

The Carthaginian explorer Hanno sailed down the West African coast sometime before 480 B.C.; the maps could be portraying lands encountered on this voyage—either the Cape Verde Islands or some portion of the coast misidentified as an island. A second possibility is the Canary Islands, which were well known to ancient geographers. Ptolemy, believing the Canary Islands to be the farthest west of all known lands, placed the prime meridian of his geographic coordinate system there.

True, the Cape Verde Islands and the Canary Islands are nowhere near as large as the landmass seemingly portrayed on the gold staters, but ancient geographers had little information to use in calculating the sizes of landmasses outside the Mediterranean world. Look at Ceylon on a Ptolemaic map for a good example of how the sizes of distant islands were greatly exaggerated.

Murder Most Fascinating

I was enthralled by Edward C. Rochette's recounting of Ray Yablun's murder by Frank Lapa (November 1996, "The Other Side of the Coin," p. 1346), perhaps the seamiest criminal incident that has ever occurred in American numismatics. I knew LAPD (Wilshire) Homicide Detective Sherman Oakes (now retired). His reputation as a "bulldog" was legendary in the department, even years before his retirement.

I don't know which was the more serious offense to society—Lapa beating Yablun to death with a glass ashtray or his subsequent parole after less than 15 years in prison. This was no "heat of passion" murder—it was a pre-planned crime of violence motivated by profit.

However, ultimately justice prevailed. I have learned from a reliable source that Frank Lapa is now deceased; he probably was in his early 60s when he died. Interestingly, he left behind a fascinating legacy of dozens of foreign numismatic fantasy items that today are rare and highly collectable.

Correction

George A. Fisher Jr.'s review of Banliang Huobi Tushuo (November 1996, "Bookmarks," p. 1370), a Chinese reference recently donated to the ANA Resource Center, requires clarification of several points. The Banliang coins were named for the two Chinese characters appearing on them; such characters do not appear on all square-holed, copper-alloy cash coins, as The Numismatist inadvertently suggested.

In addition, the book pictures rubbings from "seven Warring States—Qin, three Qin, and 13 Western Han coin molds." Lastly, the "stone and copper" molds cited in the text refer only to those shown in the reviewed book. Fisher explains that "virtually all circulation coins for more than 2,000 years were made in ceramic or sand molds, which usually were broken when the coins were removed from them."

Association Policy for Selection of Official Auctioneers

The American Numismatic Association periodically solicits bids for auctioneers for sales held in conjunction with its National Money Show and Anniversary Convention. It often is believed that the ANA Board of Governors considers only financial criteria in the selection of an official auctioneer. Such is not the case. In fact, several years ago the auction contract was awarded to the second-highest bidder.

Although there is no established, written criteria for the selection of an official auctioneer, the ANA Board considers:

- the auction firm's reputation, professionalism and dependability.
- proposals that best serve the interests of collectors, auction clients and the ANA.
- proposals that offer financial remuneration or royalties commensurate with the Association's investment or budgetary requirements.

Many auction firms fulfill all or a majority of these requirements. If an auction house chooses to advertise its fulfillment of such requirements upon being awarded an ANA auction contract, it may do so. However, the firm may not state or imply that other auction houses did not meet such requirements.

FINLAND: 1996 Mint Set Showcases Native Flora and Fauna

Five coins and a token, packaged in a colorful folder featuring native flora and fauna, comprise Finland's 1996 mint set. The bimetallic 10 markkaa has a copper-nickel ring around a brass center, which carries a depiction of a capercaillie bird. Copper-aluminum-nickel 5- and 1-markka coins feature a ringed seal and a Finnish heraldic lion, respectively; copper-nickel 50- and 10-pennia coins are decorated with an assortment of flower pods and stems. The set is limited to 20,000 specimens.

All coins were designed by sculptor Antti Neuvonen and bear the initial "M" for Mintmaster Raimo Tapio Makkonen. The mint set also includes a token depicting the third director of the Mint of Finland, I.G. Sundell (1912-47), on whose initiative the name of the country appears on coinage in both Finnish and Swedish (SUOMI/FINLAND).

Native flora and fauna featured on Finland's coinage are highlighted on the colorful folder housing the Mint of Finland's 1996 mint set. Included in the set is the bimetallic 10 markkaa, whose brass center shows a capercaillie bird.

Collectors can order the Finland 1996 mint set for $18.50 (plus $4 shipping and handling) from the Mint of Finland's North American distributor, the Coin & Currency Institute, P.O. Box 1057, Clifton, NJ 07014, telephone toll free 800/421-1866, fax 201/471-1062, or E-mail coincurin@aol.com. New Jersey residents should add 6-percent sales tax.

HUNGARY: Nation Celebrates 1,100-Year Anniversary

The National Bank of Hungary recently released gold proof 20,000-forint and sterling silver 2,000-forint coins marking the nation's 1,100th anniversary. The coins' motifs, reflecting Hungary's tradition as a nation of horsemen, are based on designs on archaeological relics from the age of the Hungarian conquest in the 9th century.

On the obverse of the gold coin, two armored Magyar warriors—arrows drawn and ready—ride galloping horses. On the reverse, a semicircular design is formed by a pair of metal fittings used to hold symbolic decorations that formed part of the ancient Magyar armorial uniform. The obverse of the silver coin features a trio of mounted archers; the hind legs of the steeds rest atop a silver plate typical of those decorating Magyar battle gear. On the reverse is a replica of the braided chest protector worn by cavalymen in battle, depicting the mythical eagle "Turul" from the legend of the Árpád dynasty, which was founded in 896 by Prince Árpád, leader of the conquering Hungarians.

Reverses of a gold 20,000 (top) and a silver 2,000 forint (bottom) issued for Hungary's 1,100-year anniversary carry the denomination, the Budapest Mint's "BP." mintmark and MAGYAR KÖZTÁRSASÁG (Republic of Hungary).

Mintage of the gold 20,000 forint is 5,000 pieces. The sterling silver 2,000 forint is struck in brilliant uncirculated and proof quality (mintage 10,000 each). For more information, contact Hungarian Coins, P.O. Box

SAN MARINO: Gold Series Honors Masters of the Renaissance

"Renaissance Masterworks" recently was introduced as the theme of the San Marino Mint's annual series of proof 1-, 2- and 5-scudo coins. The first three pieces in the series, dated 1996, feature the work of Michelangelo (1475-1564). The 5 scudi, unveiled last November, bears an adaptation of his Pietà; the 2- and 1-scudo pieces, released in January, re-create the artist's David and Kneeling Angel, respectively.

Mintage of the 1996 San Marino proof 5 scudi is limited to 8,500 pieces; it weighs 16.97g and measures 28mm in diameter. It carries an issue price of 450,000 lire from Azienda Autonoma di Stato Filatelica e Numismatica, Philatelic and Numismatic Department, Piazza Garibaldi, 47031 Repubblica di San Marino.

Actual Size: 28mm

The work of Michelangelo is highlighted on San Marino's new coin series paying tribute to Renaissance artworks. The 1996-dated, gold 5 scudi shows the artist's famous sculpture Pietà.

NUMISMATIC NARRATIVES

ANA Museum Coins Appear in "Tiny Tome"

A little, hardcover book—1 $\frac{7}{16}$ x 2 inches—utilizes color photographs of specimens from the ANA Money Museum's cabinet to help tell the story of our nation's coinage. An informative, 128-page book by Mark Hoff, American Coins is filled with historical facts and anecdotes.

Ariel Books, in association with Andrews and McMeel publishers, a division of Universal Press Syndicate, has produced this pocketwatch-sized book filled with beautiful photographs that coin collectors can appreciate and other readers will find interesting. Dubbed a "tiny tome" by Ariel Books, the little wonder provides a very brief history of numismatics and then traces America's growth through its coinage. Chapters cover Hard Times tokens; California's gold rush; the Civil War; famous gold pieces, fakes and forgeries; and "fun facts about coins."

The book is one of a series of 48 miniature books produced by Ariel covering a wide range of topics and has a retail list price of $3.95. To order, contact Andrews and McMeel, 4520 Main St., Kansas City, MO 64111-7701, or telephone 800/642-6480.

The London Coin Fair is held four times per year, with the February show typically being the busiest event with more than 80 numismatic dealers. Numismatic Sites on the Internet Are Growing

The Classical and Medieval Numismatic Society (CMNS) and the United States Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP) procurement have both joined the Internet. Their arrival adds to an ever-growing number of numismatic information sites accessible through the Internet, including the ANA at <http://www.money.org>.

CMNS established a home page through Numismatic Network Canada (NNC), a nonprofit association owned and controlled by leading Canadian numismatic organizations. Its home page and hyper-linked pages are accessible at <http://home.ican.net/~nunetcan/>.

Collecting Encouraged in Two NANA Articles

The National Association of Numismatic Advertisers (NANA), in cooperation with Tom Becker, is distributing two free articles designed to encourage new coin collectors. Dick Wagner, outgoing president of NANA, says the articles can aid collectors at all levels by helping new collectors join and stay with the hobby.

One article, entitled "The Truth about Starting a Coin Collection," is an eight-page piece directed at younger collectors. It provides hints about forming a collection and how to spend wisely to achieve goals and have fun.

The second article, "The Truth about People and Coin Collecting," is aimed at parents or guardians of new collectors. The piece suggests ways to help but not overpower someone just entering the hobby.

Both articles are available from participating NANA dealers or at numismatic shows. For more information, contact Dick Wagner at 541/756-7111.

Gilroy Roberts and the Kennedy Half Dollar

by Robert W. Hoge
ANA 87637

A talented artist, sculptor and engraver, Gilroy Roberts made an indelible mark on numismatics with his obverse design for one of the world's most popular coins.

Gilroy Roberts was the only artist to have worked as an engraver for the U.S. Bureau of Engraving and Printing and as a sculptor for the U.S. Mint.

GILROY ROBERTS (1905-92) was one of the foremost portrait medalists of his time. He earned recognition as an outstanding talent in a variety of fields, and was the only individual to work both as an engraver with the United States Bureau of Engraving and Printing and as a sculptor for the United States Mint. One of a mere handful of artists in the modern world with the ability to carve original, bas-relief dies in steel, Roberts also mastered the skills necessary to produce medallic works that conformed to advanced minting requirements.

Gilroy Roberts was born in Philadelphia into an artistic family. His father, John, was a sculptor, and his mother, Blanche Gilroy, was a noted painter and sculptress. His parents hoped their only son would become an accomplished musician, but this was not to be his destiny.

As a young man, Roberts took classes at the Pennsylvania Academy of Art, supporting his wife and new family by taking jobs as an apprentice electrician and as an auto mechanic. His artistic talents caught the eye of one of his mother's friends, U.S. Mint Chief Engraver John R. Sinnock, who secured a position for him at the Philadelphia Mint in 1936. His work there ended abruptly in January 1938 when President Franklin D. Roosevelt ordered a cut in government staff.

Roberts' departure from the Mint took him to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. It was there that he

Creation of the Kennedy Half Dollar

by Gerald Tebben, ANA 124464

Do you remember what you were doing the day President John F. Kennedy was assassinated? Most of us do.

In tribute to the slain President, the United States Mint struck the Kennedy half dollar; however, work on the coin actually began more than two years before that fateful day in Dallas. For over a century, the Mint has marked the inauguration of each President with a magnificent medal. The original models for Kennedy's inaugural piece, created by U.S. Mint Chief Engraver Gilroy Roberts, had been preserved, making speedy production of the Kennedy half dollar possible.

Three days after Kennedy's assassination on November 22, 1963, the Mint was alerted that serious consideration was being given to placing Kennedy's portrait on the quarter, half dollar or dollar. The latter apparently was not favored for the tribute, and the President's widow, Jacqueline Kennedy, ruled out the quarter, saying she did not want her late husband's likeness to replace that of George Washington. That left the half dollar.

Two days later, Gilroy Roberts was told to begin work on the Kennedy half dollar. For the obverse, he used elements from the inaugural medal he had designed; the reverse was the work of Frank Gasparro.

On December 13, trial coins were struck and shipped to Washington for review by Mrs. Kennedy and the late President's brother Robert. Mrs. Kennedy approved the design, asking only that the part in her husband's hair be softened. The Mint quickly made the change and prepared new strikes for final approval.

Congress approved the new coin shortly thereafter, and production began in January 1964. Coins were stockpiled until late March, when 26 million were put into circulation. Demand was so great that many banks had to ration the coins, giving customers only one or two at a time. •

Gilroy Roberts' sketch depicting President John F. Kennedy (above) predates his creation of the Kennedy half dollar obverse. The artist once noted that "the need to make the subject recognizable deprives you of some of your identity as an artist. A portrait is pretty well designed for you. Composition and, when possible, personal observation are the only tools you can use to show that a portrait is actually a personal view of the subject."

perfected his skills in engraving bank notes and postage stamps, and displayed his genius for portraiture.

He returned to the Mint in May 1944 as Sinnock's assistant. A little more than a year after Sinnock's death in May 1947, Roberts was named chief engraver.

In this position, Roberts designed coins for a half dozen nations; sculpted inaugural medals for Presidents Harry S. Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson; and produced Congressional Medals honoring Irving Berlin, Dr. Jonas Salk and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill. However, Roberts is best known for his portrait of Kennedy on the U.S. half dollar, one of the world's most popular coins.

In 1964 Roberts resigned as chief engraver, the first person ever to do so (his predecessors died in office). He then went to work for the Franklin Mint, eventually becoming chairman of the board of the parent company, General Numismatics Corporation. At the Franklin Mint, he designed medals commemorating Senator Robert Kennedy, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and many others.

Hair Apparent: The Proof 1964 Kennedy Half Dollar

Two varieties of proof 1964 Kennedy half dollars have been observed: one that represents Gilroy Roberts' original engraving of John F. Kennedy (left), and another on which Kennedy's hair has been accented (right). A specimen of the first variety commands approximately $7, while an example of the second may bring as much as $20. •

Always an artist at heart, Roberts once stated, "There's just as much romance in art as people think there is . . . [it] naturally comes from the joy of creating. I don't think there's anything on earth that can match the satisfaction of using your skill and imagination to produce something that you feel is right and that other people respond to in the way you hoped they would."

To celebrate the creativity and accomplishments of this talented artist, the American Numismatic Association, in conjunction with the Gilroy and Lillian Roberts Foundation, prepared a traveling exhibit entitled "A Life in the Arts: Medallion Works of Gilroy Roberts." The display gets to the heart of the creative process by featuring sketches and final drawings, as well as works representative of his favorite and most acclaimed projects. Accompanying the exhibit are some of Roberts' personal sculpting tools; positive and negative plaster models (crucial stages in the fashioning of modern medallion sculptures); bronze galvanoes (electrolytically produced, metallic renditions developed from the plasters); and finished examples of his works.

Many of Roberts' creations are admired for their liveliness. He expressed the belief that "a quick sketch is sometimes the best work you'll ever do. That sort of a first impression sometimes says more, and has more life to it, than any completed piece ever can. The element of spontaneity is very hard for an artist to catch. I think most artists probably like their sketches more than they do the finished artwork."

The Gilroy Roberts Workshop at ANA headquarters in Colorado Springs faithfully re-creates the studio the artist maintained in his Pennsylvania home. Among the many fascinating tools and pieces of equipment on display is a cast-iron easel once owned by Roberts' mentor, John Sinnock, who gave it to his talented, young friend and successor.

Roberts' Initials Cause an Uproar

The collapse of communism and the breakup of the Soviet Union have helped make the politics of the early 1950s a distant memory. But many of us will never forget the name of one of the most famous political figures of that era—Senator Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin.

McCarthy's reckless accusations ruined the lives of many citizens and heightened the public's anxiety. Fears of a communist conspiracy affected many aspects of American life—even our coins.

A ludicrous outgrowth of McCarthy-era paranoia occurred when some people interpreted Gilroy Roberts' monogram on the Kennedy half dollar as a communist hammer and sickle. The Treasury Department vigorously denounced the rumor and ultimately issued a press release, which included a photographic enlargement of the initials.

ANA re-created his personal studio at Association headquarters in Colorado Springs. Here, visitors to the ANA Money Museum can view the artist's experiments in clay and plaster that preceded, and perhaps inspired, his most celebrated works. Indeed, the reassembled workshop brings Roberts' creative vision to life.

Robert W. Hoge is curator of the ANA Money Museum in Colorado Springs, a position endowed by the Kenneth Keith Memorial Fund. Hoge received his education at the University of Colorado in Boulder and the University of Chicago. Among his specialties are minting history and coins of the ancient world.

Classical Coins of Quality and Distinction

Mithrapata, Dynast of Antiphellos - AR Stater, ca. 380 BC

During the 5th and 4th centuries BC, Lycia (in modern day Turkey) was under Persian suzerainty. The right to strike coins was granted to Lycian Dynasts down to the time of the invasion by Maussollos from Caria in 360 BC. Among these suzerains were the Dynasts of Antiphellos, including a certain Mithrapata, who reigned in about 380 BC. Although little is known about these dynasts, stylistic analysis of the images on their coins provides a clue to their chronology. The lion's head with forepaw—found on the obverse of some coins struck for Mithrapata—can readily be compared to the known issues of Knidos in use after 394 BC. The first major find of Dynastic issues from Lycia was made in 1957. Extensive research was compiled from 488 Lycian coins in this find and published as "The Coin Hoard from Podalia." For further information, see The Numismatic Chronicle (1971). It is relatively certain that the period of the early 4th century proposed by Olçay and Mørkholm is the correct period for this rare series of coins.

How Do I Know What My Coin Is Worth?

Collectors should be aware of the factors that determine the values of coins, as well as how to estimate the fair price for a particular piece.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND remain the primary factors that determine a coin's value. It matters little if 2,000 of a certain proof Indian Head cent are extant if only 1,000 collectors want to add one to their collections. The price of a coin will remain steady unless the supply/demand scale is tipped in one direction or the other.

Prices increase when demand quickens or existing supplies diminish. These market changes can happen in several ways, among them loss by attrition or mishandling, or an increase in sales to collectors. Sales will go on the upswing when existing collectors begin to seek examples or when new collectors enter the hobby. (A certain percentage of collectors are bound to ask for proof Indian Head cents, as they will other series.)

Conversely, prices decline when demand lessens or the supply base increases. These shifts can occur when collectors of a certain series decide to pursue a different numismatic goal, which frequently takes place when a "price block" is reached. Price blocks, or "walls," are erected when the common, or less expensive, dates in a series have been obtained, and the realization sets in that the semi-key and key dates are simply too expensive to chase. The collection has gone as far as it possibly can and is sold, resulting in a greater supply for other collectors. (Among the saddest causes for an increase in the supply of a given series and a dip in prices is collectors leaving the hobby, with no replacements on the horizon.)

Often overlooked in the structure of coin values are various sub-factors, one of the most critical of which is grade. Can you name one collector who does not want to own the best possible example of a given date and mintmark? Fierce competition exists for coins graded in the upper echelons of the mint-state scale. The summer of 1996 provided a prime example of this situation. Prices for Mint State (MS)-63 and -64 United States commemoratives of the early period had not varied much in the previous few years. Meanwhile, most of these same coins in grades of MS-65 and higher were anything but stagnant, having posted steady increases in value. There seemed to be an abundant supply of uncirculated grades up to and including MS-64 to satisfy collector demand, but it was quite another story for pieces in the higher levels of preservation.

When supply equals demand, the price of a coin remains stable. Only when the supply/demand scale tips in one direction will its price change.

While we're on the subject of grade, please remember that grading is a subjective matter. It makes no difference whether I say a coin is MS-65 or that it is a gorgeous example. You alone must be satisfied that the coin possesses superior eye appeal and agree with the grade in relation to the asking price. You are the sole judge of what enters your collection. If you want to get the "feel" for what makes a specimen an MS-65 (or any other grade, for that matter), visit coin shows and conventions, and look at as many coins as possible certified by the various grading services. Also, take time to examine some of the so-called "raw," or uncertified, coins from the dealers with whom you do business, or would like to do business, so you will have a deeper understanding of how they grade. You will then have a pretty good picture of what to expect when you purchase a coin sight unseen.

Then there's the question of preservation. How many of us would like to add a deeply tarnished coin to our collections? Not many, I'm afraid. The vast majority would prefer a brilliant coin, or perhaps one with a pleasing touch of attractive, original toning. Yes, eye appeal is another of the very important sub-factors that help set a coin's value. Don't purchase any piece unless you find it satisfactory in every possible way.

The factors and sub-factors discussed here each contribute in their own way to establishing a coin's price. Put another way, the price of a coin is exactly what a willing buyer will pay the owner, or seller, based on these components.

Documented prices often are compiled into guides. Keep in mind that they are just that—guides. Not all MS-63 coins are alike. You're liable to find as many different prices for a particular coin in a certain grade as there are price guides. You also must realize that certain guides are based on wholesale, or dealer-to-dealer, transactions. The most notable of

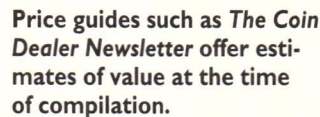

Over the past few years, competition for early U.S. commemoratives in MS-65 and higher has resulted in steady increases in value.

Another important point to remember is that certain guides could very well be obsolete by the time the printed version is in your hands. An annual guide with a 1997 cover date may have been released during the preceding summer and actually prepared several months before that. A monthly price guide featuring an October date that arrives in your mailbox in early September likely was compiled in July. Prices quoted in guides reflect the publisher's perceived retail values for the coins at the time the publication was prepared, not as of the cover date, unless, of course, the publisher has the benefit of the first numismatic crystal ball. So, take most price guides with the proverbial grain of salt and consider them to be an estimate of prices at the time of compilation. (One notable exception would be the aforementioned Coin Dealer Newsletter. This listing is a Friday morning report of the coin market that arrives in most dealers' mailboxes the next day.)

If you made a fortuitous purchase by selecting a high-grade coin that has superb eye appeal and is in constant demand, then you stand an excellent chance of making a financial profit to go along with the pure numismatic enjoyment you've experienced. This is especially true if you have held the coin for a reasonably long period of time, usually 5 to 10 years.

Gold Sovereigns of the Egypt

SHIPWRECKS & TREASURE TROVE

Indomitable salvors used innovative diving techniques to recover huge quantities of gold from the wreck of a packet liner.

THE SALVAGE OF the paddle-wheel steamer S.S. Central America by the Columbus-America Discovery Group in 1985 made news in the numismatic community because of the many rarities found among the gold coins that were raised. Bound for New York with more than 3 tons of California gold, the ship sank in a hurricane off the Carolina coast.

One of the most remarkable aspects of this salvage effort is that the gold was recovered from a depth of 8,500 feet with the help of a remote-controlled, robot submersible. However, this was not the first golden treasure to be recovered from a great depth involving innovative, deep-sea salvage techniques. More than 60 years ago, huge quantities of gold coins and ingots were retrieved against great odds from another deep-water wreck.

The Sinking of the Egypt

ON MAY 22, 1922, the packet liner Egypt was on the initial leg of a voyage from England to India. In addition to passengers, she carried gold and silver bullion, as well as gold sovereigns valued at more than $5 million. The fog was thick that night off the Brittany coast, and visibility was almost nil. Suddenly, out of the dense fog loomed the French tramp steamer Seine. Too late for either ship to change course, the bow of the Seine slammed into the helpless Egypt. The badly damaged Egypt went down in less than 20 minutes. The loss of life was heavy—16 passengers and 86 crew members perished in the tragic accident.

While she remained afloat, her radio operator was able to transmit her precise location—about 25 miles southwest of the island of Ushant (Île d'Ouessant). This would prove to be important when salvage efforts were initiated.

Rammed by a tramp steamer on the foggy night of May 22, 1922, the Egypt went down off the island of Ushant on the coast of Brittany.

THERE WERE NO further serious efforts at finding the Egypt until 1929, when renowned Italian diver Giovanni Quaglia arrived on the scene.

Since the ship had gone down in more than 400 feet of water, a depth never before reached by divers in conventional diving suits, the vessel and its treasure were regarded as a total loss. Lloyd's in London, the underwriters of the Egypt's cargo, paid off.

Salvage Operations Begin

DURING THE 19TH and early 20th centuries, divers in conventional diving suits could not safely go deeper than 150 feet. By the time of the Egypt's sinking, however, new developments in equipment and techniques promised to change the situation. Improved suits and diving bells were constructed of steel to withstand the great pressure exerted in deep water. Divers breathed air of normal surface pressure, lessening the chance of the potentially deadly bends, which occurred when divers in pressurized suits were brought to the surface too quickly.

Aware of these developments, two of the insurance underwriters decided to try salvaging the Egypt. Shortly after the disaster, they hired a Swedish captain by the name of Hedbach to search for the wreckage. Hedbach swept the ocean floor in the area where the Egypt was thought to have gone down. The sweep cable caught on a obstacle, and soundings confirmed the presence of a wreck. Three years passed while the salvors looked for suitable equipment. In 1926 German divers in "iron man" diving suits were lowered at the site, but found nothing, and the project was abandoned.

There were no further serious efforts at finding the Egypt until 1929, when renowned Italian diver Giovanni Quaglia arrived on the scene. Quaglia was highly experienced and already had salvaged other deep-water wrecks using an armored diving suit. His group, called "Sorima" (Società Ricuperi Marittimi of Genoa), obtained permission from the Egypt's insurance underwriters to initiate recovery operations.

The spring of 1929 was very stormy, hindering search efforts, but Quaglia's team, working from their surface ship Artiglio, persevered. They were unable to locate Hedbach's wreck site before winter ended operations for the year.

In 1930 the search was resumed. Cruising back and forth, the Artiglio approached the location of Hedbach's underwater obstacle. This time the crew snagged a cable, which when it was pulled up, brought with it a boat davit. Enclosed in articulated, "robot" diving suits and lowered by a thick cable, divers were dispatched to investigate the wreck site. A compressor aboard the surface ship pumped air down through the cable. Because the divers' mobility was limited by the rigid structure of the suit, their primary purpose was to observe.

They determined by the size and shape of the wreckage that they had indeed found the Egypt. Unfortunately, it had settled to the bottom in an upright position, which meant salvors would somehow have to break through four of the ship's decks to reach the bullion room, where the gold was located.

Quaglia's team developed an effective plan of attack. A diver lowered to the wreck site in an observation chamber would direct the underwater operations via telephone wire to the surface. After explosives lowered to the Egypt's deck were exploded, electromagnets would be used to clear away the steel debris. The process would be repeated until the bullion room was reached. The golden treasure, hopefully still stored in its boxes and bags, could then be grappled and raised to the surface.

Before they reached the bullion room, Quaglia's divers raised the captain's safe from its location on the boat deck. Amid great anticipation, the safe was placed on the Artiglio's deck; unfortunately, when it was opened, it contained only a British foreign office diplomatic pouch and, ironically, the key to the bullion room!

Persistence Despite Tragedy

SALVAGE OPERATIONS WERE continually interrupted by bad weather, and the process was long, laborious and dangerous. Inclement weather forced the Artiglio off the wreck in October 1930, and now Quaglia was running seriously short of funds. While awaiting the coming of spring to launch the next assault on the Egypt, Sorima took on another salvage assignment, with disastrous results.

Sorima was awarded the contract to blow up the wreck of a French World War I cargo ship that was considered a navigational hazard in the Bay of Biscay. During the work, an accidental explosion aboard the Artiglio set off her dynamite stocks, and the ship sank with 14 crew members.

Undeterred by the catastrophe, the remaining divers, supplemented by new men, sailed out in May 1931 in their new ship, Artiglio II, to renew Renowned Italian diver Giovanni Quaglia, shown holding the first gold bars from the Egypt, led the salvage team.

THE SEVEN-YEAR EFFORT . . . was amazingly successful, recovering 97.4 percent of the silver bars, 98.5 percent of the gold bars and 90.9 percent of the sovereigns.

operations on the Egypt. They began blasting through her decks, making steady progress. On November 1, 1931, they ripped away the last fragments of the ceiling of the bullion room. The treasure was in sight!

To the joy of the salvage team, the bullion boxes appeared to be intact, which would make the recovery much easier. However, winter storms ended the diving season before any treasure could be raised. The team reluctantly retreated to port to await spring.

The weather in the spring of 1932 was fine, and the divers worked swiftly to clear the bullion room of debris and begin the task of raising the treasure. With the help of grapnels, the work went smoothly, and at last the first boxes of bullion were brought up to the Artiglio II. Soon the deck was covered with gold and silver bars! The results were phenomenal—by August the salvors managed to recover gold and silver totaling about half the Egypt's consignment of $5 million. By September, $3.25 million in gold and silver was rescued.

A great deal of treasure remained in the wreckage, and in 1933 the now-systematic process of raising the gold and silver was resumed. Work continued through the 1934 and 1935 diving seasons, with the last load of accessible treasure raised in July 1935. The seven-year effort, working in deep water under dangerous conditions, was amazingly successful, recovering 97.4 percent of the silver bars, 98.5 percent of the gold bars, and 90.9 percent of the sovereigns.

The Gold Sovereigns

INCLUDED IN THE Egypt's treasure were roughly 100,000 British gold sovereigns. Many of these coins were recovered in 1932, at the time the first gold and silver bars were brought to the surface. However, the bags that held many of the coins had broken open, scattering the pieces loosely about the ship's bullion room. Their recovery promised to be a very difficult process. In 1933 Quaglia and his team developed an innovative solution to the problem.

A long, metal tube with a glass cover on the bottom end was lowered into place over the coins. At a signal from the diver, the glass was exploded remotely from the surface. Because the atmospheric pressure in the tube had been maintained, the explosion caused water to rush into the tube, carrying along with it many gold coins. An automatic trap kept them from falling back out. On the first day, 6,000 gold sovereigns were recovered in this manner. In August and September 1934, a total of 20,256 sovereigns was recovered. When work was finally suspended in 1935, about 10,000 coins remained scattered throughout the wreck.

AFTER THE DISPOSITION between Lloyd's underwriting syndicate and Sorima, most of the remaining coins were released into normal financial channels.

Unlike the golden rarities salvaged from the Central America, these coins were regular-issue British sovereigns. No listing of the pieces by date is available. After the disposition of the Egypt's treasure between Lloyd's underwriting syndicate and Sorima, most of the remaining coins were released into normal financial channels.

However, not all of the sovereigns faded into obscurity. To commemorate the unexpectedly successful salvage of the Egypt, Lloyd's saved some coins in brown-leather souvenir cases that were impressed with the firm's insignia. Inside the case was a small card that read:

"EGYPT" SALVAGE

This sovereign was recovered in June, 1932, by the Italian Salvage Steamer "Artiglio" from the P.&O. Steamer "Egypt" which sank off Ushant on May 20th 1922, in 70 fathoms after collision.

P.G. Mackinnon
CHAIRMAN OF LLOYD'S.

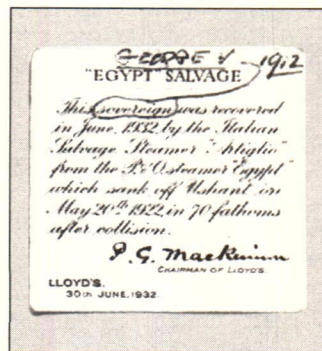

LLOYD'S,
30th. June, 1932.

Apparently intended as mementos for members of the Lloyd's underwriting team and favored customers, the coins appear on the numismatic market on very rare occasions. One such piece was sold as Lot 39 in a 1980 Glendining & Company auction. The coin is in uncirculated condition, and the only evidence of its immersion in the sea are some small, brown spots on the reverse. (While gold is impervious to the corrosive effects of saltwater, the coin's alloy includes copper, which sometimes discolours slightly.) This golden sovereign is a fascinating numismatic souvenir of a truly remarkable salvage achievement. •

THE ART OF ENGRAVING

A one-of-a kind class to teach and promote this vanishing art . . .
underwritten by the Gilroy and Lillian P.
Roberts Foundation

Scholarships available
Class Limit: 5 Students
July 11-18, 1997
Colorado Springs, CO

The Art of Engraving is a week-long class offered by the American Numismatic Association and fully underwritten by the Gilroy and Lillian P. Roberts Foundation. Mr. Roberts, a renowned engraver and artist, was the 9th Chief Engraver of the U.S. Mint and chairman of the board of the forerunner of the Franklin Mint. The course utilizes the art facilities of The Colorado College and explores the ancient art of hand die-engraving, together with more modern processes used to create coins and medallions today. Students also will have the opportunity to visit the Gilroy Roberts Workshop, now located at the ANA World Money Museum in Colorado Springs.

The Art of Engraving is currently the only class of its kind offered within the United States. The instructor is Virginia Janssen, a graduate of the Italian Mint's world-famous Scuola Dell'Arte Della Medaglia. Her medallic sculpture has been exhibited both in Europe and the U.S. The class is limited to five students. Each student selected for the class receives a full scholarship (tuition, room, board, domestic transportation, $250 stipend). Prospective students must complete an application and submit at least four examples (photos, slides, etc.) of their work. Applicants need not be professional artists, and all applications will be considered.

Scholarship applications will be processed as they are received. The judging committee is comprised of Tom Rogers, a sculptor/engraver at the U.S. Mint; Robert Hoge, ANA Museum Curator; and Ms. Janssen.

Scholarship application deadline: April 10, 1997.

Successful applicants will be notified in April. Course dates: July 11-18, 1997.

A Half Dime with a Damaged Reputation

by Bill Fivaz
LM 1100

A common variety of 1838 Seated Liberty half dime displays a not-so-common anomaly on the reverse, causing at least one collector to question its genesis.

Actual Size: 15.50mm

From 1838 to 1840, the stars on the obverse of the Seated Liberty half dime were punched into the dies by hand, resulting in numerous varieties. The specimen above is classified as Variety 12 in Daniel W. Valentine's 1931 reference United States Half Dimes.

WHEN MINT DIRECTOR Robert M. Patterson ordered a redesign of United States coinage in 1835, Chief Engraver William Kneass began work on the project. However, he suffered a stroke not long after, and Assistant Engraver Christian Gobrecht took over, using sketches prepared by Kneass and artists Thomas Sully and Titian Peale. Gobrecht's series of Seated Liberty coinage officially began in 1837 with the minting of half dimes and dimes.

From 1838 to 1840, the 13 stars surrounding Miss Liberty were punched into each die by hand, resulting in many irregularities in their size and position. All told, 15 varieties of 1838 half dimes have been documented. (Daniel W. Valentine fully described the denomination in his 1931 reference United States Half Dimes; subsequently, half dime varieties came to be classified by "Valentine numbers.")

Recently, I had occasion to see an 1838 half dime that exhibited very serious damage to the reverse die. By all appearances, the coin is an example of the V-10 variety. Valentine described the coin's obverse as "first star low and close, all of the points on this star defective." He noted that the reverse was "similar to die of 1837 No. 2, but die badly broken between AMERICA and wreath."

The coin I examined was a fully struck Mint-State (MS)-64 specimen, with a full head and full design lines on every star on the obverse. The first star is dramatically repunched. Repunching also is visible on three digits of the date, a characteristic not mentioned by Valentine. The numeral 1 is repunched below the flag and at the lower right serif. Doubling is evident inside the upper loop of the 3 and the second 8, as well as at the outside left of the loop junction of the second 8 and at the inside right of the lower loop of the second 8. The obverse and reverse dies are heavily clashed.

Adapted from "An 1838 V-10 Half Dime from a Damaged Reverse Die" by Bill Fivaz, published in The Gobrecht Journal (Vol. 22, No. 66), official publication of the Liberty Seated Collectors Club.

IT IS THE reverse, however, that makes this coin so unusual. The die exhibits severe damage through most letters in AMERICA, down into the wreath . . .

It is the reverse, however, that makes this coin so unusual. The die exhibits severe damage through most letters in AMERICA, down into the wreath below each letter and up into the denticles above the letters ER and IC. The areas of raised metal in the field indicate that the surface of the die was damaged. But the additional metal on the C of AMERICA also suggests that incuse portions of the die also were damaged.

Despite its dramatic appearance, the 1838 V-10 half dime is not uncommon and generally is obtainable for $15 to $650, depending on grade. A mint-state example with "large stars" recently was offered in Bowers and Merena Galleries' sale of the Louis E. Eliasberg Sr. Collection (May 20-22, 1996). Cataloged as Lot 945, the piece was described as such: "1 and 3 in date slightly double punched. Star 1 dramatically and curiously double punched, star 3 slightly so. On reverse first A in AMERICA with die lump at left, repunching at lower right. Extensive and very interesting area of die failure below MERICA." The coin realized $3,410.

The damage to the reverse die of the 1838 half dime I viewed is as severe as any I have seen. How this deterioration could have occurred is a mystery to me. I challenge others to help me solve this riddle! •

GOOD NEWS FOR ANA MEMBERS!

THE NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA
IS THE OFFICIAL GRADING SERVICE
OF THE

ATTN: ANA Members

The American Numismatic Association has selected Numismatic Guaranty Corporation of America (NGC) to serve its members as the ANA's authorized grading service. The reputation of NGC for accuracy and integrity impressed the ANA's board and management, as did the company's solid program of numismatic education. Premier among these efforts is PHOTO PROOF,TM an exciting new way to enjoy one's coins while learning more about them.

ANA members can submit coins to NGC through the ANA itself, assuring that their valued items will be handled throughout by persons knowledgeable in their care. Offered services include certification (grading and encapsulation), as well as PHOTO PROOFTM (full-color digital images of your coin accompanied by an expertly written evaluation and historical text). The value of PHOTO PROOFTM in particular as an instrument of learning was summed up by ANA Executive Director Robert J. Leuver: "It was the educational aspect of PHOTO PROOFTM that helped clinch the negotiations. This will help all collector-members learn more about the pieces while providing superb grading by one of the foremost certification firms in the country."

NGC was selected over its competitors to be the ANA's official grading service because of its outstanding record of service to the numismatic community. Respected by collectors and dealers alike for its consistent grading, NGC has made a firm commitment to the future of numismatics. While providing both certified grading and PHOTO PROOFTM services to the ANA's members, NGC is also sustaining the hobby in cooperation with the ANA through shared resources. The talent and experience of both organizations are being combined in educational projects designed to meet the needs of collectors and dealers alike. In addition, NGC is furnishing a source of revenue to the ANA so that America's premier organization for coin collectors can better fulfill its mission.

For information on how to submit coins for certification and/or PHOTO PROOFTM see the instructions and submission forms in this issue of The Numismatist. If you have any questions about these services, call the ANA at 1-800-467-5725 or call NGC at 1-800-NGC-COIN. For specific information about PHOTO PROOFTM call 1-800-PROOF 67. We love to talk coins!

Inside the Red Book

THIS MONTH I continue with part four of my commentary on the many people behind the development of A Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book").

On the Scene in 1946

Returning to 1946, when the Guide Book was being put together, Richard S. Yeoman's roster of 14 contributors was, no doubt, sufficient for his needs. Yeoman probably compiled and wrote the main text, and created the front portion, "An Introduction to United States Coins." Interestingly, this same title is found in the latest (1997) edition. Although there have been a few changes over the years, many of the words in the 50th edition are the same as those in the first. Today, as it was in 1946, these pages of introductory material provide one of the best overviews of American coinage to be found anywhere in print. At least once a year, I re-read these words, and each time I pick up a tidbit or two that I had forgotten or missed.

In his preface to the first edition, Yeoman noted that it was offered to the public as "a low-priced standard reference book on United States coins and kindred issues . . . a long-felt need among American collectors." At the time, Wayne Raymond's Standard Catalogue of United States Coins had a cover price of $3. Apparently Yeoman felt this was "high priced" in contrast to his new effort, which listed at just $1.50 (meanwhile, the Handbook of United States Coins, then in its 4th edition, could be purchased for 50 cents at hobby stores).

"The use of technical terms and descriptions has been avoided wherever possible," Yeoman continued in his preface. "Listings of minor varieties or mention of unimportant facts do not fall within the scope of this book, and therefore have been omitted. The expert numismatist certainly will find much of interest in these pages, but we must refer him to more specialized works for complete details on such subjects as patterns, complete lists of die varieties and the like. The material within these covers is necessarily brief and confined to the essentials."

These comments notwithstanding, a side-by-side comparison of Raymond's Standard Catalogue and Yeoman's Guide Book shows that both gave approximately the same information when it came to basic series from half cents through $20 pieces. Beyond that, in areas such as patterns, the Raymond volume had more information. However, probably 95 percent of all coin collectors could find what they needed in the Red Book.

In the late 1940s, Raymond was in the final years of his illustrious career. By contrast, Yeoman was on the ascendancy. Raymond was resting on his laurels, so to speak, and while he had many fine accomplishments ahead of him—such as sponsoring the young Walter Breen in his first numismatic research and acting as a mentor for John J. Ford Jr.—the days of the Standard Catalogue were numbered, and slightly over a decade later, publication would cease.

An Overnight Sensation

Meanwhile, the Guide Book became an instant success. With greater distribution channels than the venerable Standard Catalogue, it sold more copies than anyone believed possible. Moreover, unlike Raymond's book, which was published more or less annually, Yeoman's Red Book came out like clockwork. Thus, after a few editions had passed, collectors looked forward to the next issue with great anticipation.

Today, we have more sources of pricing information than can be counted easily. Not only is there the Guide Book, which is issued on an annual basis, but there also are weekly periodicals, such as Coin World, The Coin Dealer Newsletter and Numismatic News. As if this were not enough, electronic trading systems provide data on a minute-by-minute basis. COINage and Coins, both monthly magazines, should be mentioned as well. Added to this are catalogs and price lists issued by dealers. In 1997 we probably are experiencing an information overload.

Anyway, back in the 1940s when the Guide Book was first published, there was not a surplus of pricing resources. The two leading periodicals—The Numismatist and Numismatic Scrapbook Magazine—did not have price guides as part of their editorial format; Numismatic News (born in 1952) was not yet a twinkle in Chet Krause's eye; and out in Sidney, Ohio, J. Oliver Amos, whose family ran the Sidney Printing and Publishing Company, probably did not know numismatics from philately and hadn't an inkling that years later, in 1960, the firm would launch Coin World.

In the 1940s, anyone seeking price information had two sources: A Guide Book of United States Coins and the Standard Catalogue of United States Coins. That was it. Period. Of course, someone who liked to keep notebooks and charts could always jot down auction prices realized and dealer advertisements, but not many people took the time to do this.

My First Guide Book

Fast forward to 1952. In this year, I bought my first copy of the Red Book. Before long, I devoured its contents from cover to cover and had committed much of it to memory. Being all of 13 years old at the time, I had a freshness and enthusiasm that was unbounded, as do most school kids of that age. I eagerly sought every scrap of information I could find.

While Yeoman's Guide Book of United States Coins was readily available, I didn't learn of Raymond's Standard Catalogue until a few months later. When I did, I could not find a copy in or near Forty-Fort, Pennsylvania, where I lived. I finally bought one by mail order. By this time, the Red Book was omnipresent in the United States, and the Standard Catalogue was on the wane and considered to be a supplemental or peripheral reference rather than the book first consulted.

You had to be there to appreciate the impact the Guide Book had at the time. Each year in the mid-1950s, dealers, collectors, and anyone else even remotely interested in coins would await the new edition and then eagerly peruse it to find out what his or her coins were worth. Anyone keeping records would add the newest figures to their ledgers. Did the 1877 Indian Head cent rise in value (as most coins did), did it go down or did it stay the same? Which series were "hot," as evidenced by the biggest price jumps, and which had lost their edge?

Regardless of what you wanted to know, Yeoman's Red Book was the be all and end all for such information. It was, without question, the source.

W. Elliot Woodward: Early Chronicler

THE NUMISMATIC ACCOMPLISHMENTS of W. Elliot Woodward are remarkable for a man with many other interests. Numismatics was a business Woodward conducted only part-time, away from his apothecary store, for his heavy investments in real estate overshadowed his investments in coins.

An extensive study of history complemented Woodward's knowledge of numismatics and can be seen in the more than 100 auction catalogs he produced. These publications may be the finest series issued by any dealer in the 19th century. They provide a historical record of early collections formed and dispersed during a period of rapid growth of the hobby. This Woodward era came long before the publication of standard references, at a time when auction catalogs were a prime source of numismatic information. Many facts known today first appeared in his catalogs, which still are eagerly studied and respected by researchers and collectors of numismatic literature.

An example is his record of the "Roxbury Find." In 1863 young George Wilber Reed was exploring a road cut in Roxbury, Massachusetts, when he found some colonial silver coins in a rock crevasse. The hoard included 16 Oak Tree pieces and 12 Pine Tree pieces of various denominations in nearly uncirculated condition. The coins naturally were taken to the local dealer, Woodward, who offered them as a single lot in a June 1864 sale. The coins failed to bring the $150 reserve and were offered individually four months later, together bringing less than $100.

William Elliot Woodward was born in Oxford, Maine, on November 29, 1825. His parents were Caleb Woodward and Hannah Cary, Caleb's second wife. William Woodward had a heavy build and curly hair. He had only one good eye, and he began to lose sight in it late in life. He died of pneumonia at home in Roxbury on January 5, 1892.

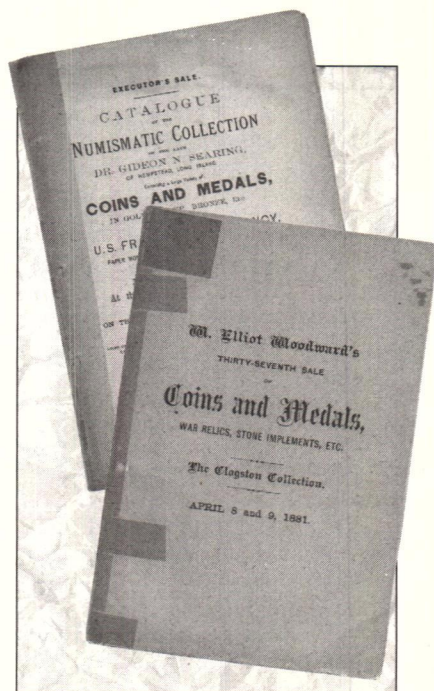

In 1848 William married Clarissa Eliza Ray, and they settled in Boston. Their son Harlow Elliot was born in 1851, and Clarence Elliot was born in 1856. Harlow grew up and became a collector. His coin collection was sold by his father in 1878, and his stamp collection was sold in 1888. Harlow was a stamp dealer into the 20th century.

William Woodward's father and grandfather had been in the tannery business, but he chose a different profession, opening the Eustis Street Pharmacy in 1852 and later changing the name to Mount Pleasant Apothecary Store. His sons opened Woodward Brothers Perfumes and Patent Medicines in 1880 and sold the Mount Pleasant store in 1889.

Like many businessmen during the Civil War, Woodward issued scrip for his store. Dated January 1, 1863, it was produced in denominations of 5 and 20 cents, and carried the notation, "This is not currency but a memorandum for change." The scrip was redeemable at the bookstore of W.H. Piper & Company at 155 Washington Street in Boston. Today, these pieces are prized by collectors of both numismatic literature and Civil War scrip.

The business arrangement with a book-dealer was a logical one for Woodward, who was an active book-buyer and collector. At an auction in New York City in May 1864, George A. Leavitt sold a Woodward collection of non-numismatic books described as "the best editions in elegant bindings."

Much of America's 19th-century numismatic history is known from the auction catalogs of part-time numismatist W. Elliot Woodward.

Woodward continued to add to his numismatic library, not only as a collector, but as a writer as well. He wrote extensively on the history of New England and also was an authority on Salem witchcraft. His numismatic reference entitled A List of Washington Memorial Medals was published in 1865.

However, it is through his catalogs that Woodward is best remembered. His finest catalog was produced for the sale of the Joseph Mickley Collection in October 1867. As with most of his sales, Woodward bought the collection intact, paying a reported $10,000. The 3,349 lots realized $13,285.70 after the gold was sold privately to Boston collector W.S. Appleton. (Numismatic literature dealer Charles Davis, who has conducted extensive biographical research on Woodward, recently reprinted the Mickley catalog, including prices and buyers' names.)

Following the Mickley sale, Woodward took an 11-year sabbatical from cataloging. During that period, he speculated and invested heavily in land in Roxbury, which was annexed by Boston in 1867. In 1873 Woodward was elected to the Boston Common Council, a year after a large fire destroyed much of the city. He later served on a committee to rename streets in the damaged area.

In Roxbury, Woodward subdivided large parcels, laid out streets and built hundreds of houses. Street names in the area include Woodward Avenue and Woodward Park Street. Clarence and Harlow Streets were named for his two sons. (A current map shows the streets still are there, about three miles south of the permanent berth of the United States frigate Constitution, known as "Old Ironsides.")

Woodward referred to his early numismatic events as semiannual sales, and 17 numbered catalogs were produced during 1860-67. Between 1878 and 1890, he produced another 90 numbered sales, with a dozen catalogs issued in 1886. Only four of those catalogs had coins, however, and just one had numismatic literature.

Like many of his contemporaries, Woodward sold more than coins. For example, some sales were devoted to arms and armor; others were limited to autographs, books and bric-a-brac; and still others included rocks and minerals, stamps or stone relics.

Woodward's catalogs frequently included barbs directed toward the catalogs of other dealers and practices of the United States Mint. He engaged in a short but bitter feud with Édouard Frossard. (Carl W.A. Carlson told the story well in "The Frossard-Woodward Feud of 1880-1881," in the June 1983 issue of The Numismatist, p. 1138.)

A commentary on Woodward's character was provided by a contemporary, Emmanuel Joseph Attinelli, in his 1876 publication Numisgraphics (republished in 1976 as A Bibliography of American Numismatic Auction Catalogs 1828-1875).

"Of an inquiring and observing turn of mind," Attinelli wrote of Woodward, "he instinctively turned to the minerals, birds, flowers, and insects of his native hills; gifted with an excellent memory, their names or localities once heard were seldom forgotten; even now his house contains many of these objects of his early search; old and curious coins, and odd things or rarities, rapidly accumulated under his search, prosecuted with an indomitable energy, industry, and perseverance, which is untiring."

Attinelli went on to describe Woodward's catalogs: "He is a strong believer in printer's ink and does not use it parsimoniously, as an examination of the coin catalogs, prepared by him, will prove, and many of the notes from his familiarity with the subjects will be found interesting to numismatists." Those words ring true more than 120 years later as researchers find interesting notes and commentary in his many catalogs.

Woodward had a business and fraternal association with fellow Mason and member of the ANA Numismatic Hall of Fame, William T.R. Marvin of Boston. Some sale catalogs were printed by T.R. Marvin & Son, printer of the American Journal of Numismatics. Woodward was the publisher of Marvin's book, The Medals of the Masonic Fraternity, released in 1880, and sold Marvin's collection of Masonic medals on June 21, 1881. In a later catalog, he stated, "No one but myself can know how much I owe to my conscientious and accurate printer, who not only never fails to disentangle my knotty manuscript, but whose careful and ready learning is always at my service." •

THE ADOPTIVE EMPERORS: COINAGE OF ROME'S ZENITH

The English historian Edward Gibbon termed the second century A.D. the "happiest age in history." Between 96 and 180 A.D., the Roman Empire was ruled by a series of capable emperors. After the assassination in A.D. 96 of Domitian, the last of the Flavian emperors, the Senate chose one of their own members, the elderly Nerva, to succeed to the throne. To secure the support of the army, the new emperor adopted the general Trajan as his son and heir in A.D. 97. This adoption set a precedent, for the next four emperors—Trajan, Hadrian, Antoninus Pius, and Marcus Aurelius—would come to the throne as the adoptive son of their predecessor. Under these "adoptive emperors," the Roman Empire would reach the zenith of its power and prosperity.

In A.D. 98, Trajan became emperor upon the death of Nerva. Under Trajan, the Roman Empire underwent its last significant territorial expansion. After two campaigns (A.D. 101-102 and 105-106), Trajan annexed the Kingdom of the Dacians (modern Romania). In A.D. 105, the Kingdom of the Nabataeans was converted into the Roman province of Arabia Petraea. In A.D. 114, a dispute with Parthia led Trajan to annex Armenia and invade Mesopotamia. In A.D. 116, Mesopotamia was declared a Roman Province. However, rebellions in the East, including those of the Jews, forced Trajan to retreat. He died in A.D. 117 before he could resume campaigning in the East. Before his death, Trajan named his adopted son Hadrian as his heir.

The reign of Hadrian was one of consolidation. The new emperor gave up Trajan's eastern conquests—Armenia regained its former status as a Roman vassal state. Other frontiers were strengthened. In Britain, the wall he built to defend against the Scottish tribes is still to be seen. Hadrian spent most of his reign outside of Italy, touring the provinces to see first-hand what were each territory's needs. In A.D. 136, Hadrian adopted a certain L. Ceionius Commodus, who took the name Aelius Caesar, as his son and heir. However, the death of Aelius in A.D. 138 compelled Hadrian to designate a new heir, Antoninus. In turn, Hadrian compelled Antoninus to adopt Lucius Verus, the son of Aelius, and a nephew of Antoninus, Marcus Annus Verus, renamed Marcus Aurelius. Hadrian died later that same year.

The reign of Antoninus Pius (A.D. 138-161) was notable chiefly for its tranquility, although in Britain a new defensive line north of Hadrian's Wall was built to keep the Scottish tribes further at bay. Also notable was the long apprenticeship of Marcus Aurelius, who was named Caesar in A.D. 139. By the time of the death of Antoninus in A.D. 161, Marcus was thoroughly prepared to assume the burdens of office. As it turned out, they would prove to be considerable.

Upon his accession, Marcus Aurelius elevated his adoptive brother, Lucius Verus, to the position of co-emperor. Marcus, however, was clearly the supreme authority. Marcus was to spend much of his reign on campaign. Invasions of German tribes from the north and of Parthians from the east bedeviled the empire. Plague, brought back from the east by the army in A.D. 166, swept the empire (a second wave of plague carried Lucius Verus away in A.D. 169). Despite these shocks, Marcus was able to restore order on the eastern frontier and was poised to annex territories on the northern frontier at the time of his death A.D. 180. Marcus was succeeded by his son Commodus, thus breaking the pattern of succession through adoption. Commodus proved to be a despot. With his accession, Rome's greatest age came to an end. The assassination of Commodus at the end of the year A.D. 192 ushered in four years of civil war.

Due to recent purchases, we are able to offer a large selection of silver denarii of the "adoptive emperors."

Overused Design Saved Money

ON JANUARY 1, 1836, our country's national debt was the second lowest in its history: $37,513. New York real estate depreciated more than $40 million in six months; in a two-month period, 250 businesses failed. Railroad and canal stocks, centered in New York, declined $20 million. Within a few weeks, 20,000 people lost their jobs.

The federal government often issues Treasury notes during such times of economic instability. The Act of October 12, 1837, authorized one-year Treasury notes in denominations of $50, $100, $500 and $1,000; some certificates were left blank so the dollar amount could be filled in at the time of issue. Notes issued under this Act were the first Treasury notes to carry back designs.

Three engraved versions of Mercury, Wealth and Justice were placed on the $50 and $100 notes, and the blank certificate. No $500 and $1,000 notes have been observed; however, they probably carried the same engraved subjects. On the $50 note and the blank certificate, the three figures were placed from left to right; the $100 shows a portion of Wealth, Mercury and Justice, respectively. These one-year Treasury notes were prepared by the firm of Rawdon, Wright & Hatch (RW&H), which was operated by George W. Hatch—who drew and engraved Mercury—and Freeman Rawdon—who created and engraved Wealth.

During subsequent years, additional Treasury notes were issued as the national debt increased: in 1838 it was $3,308,124, and in 1839 it reached $10,434,221. The national debt declined in 1840 and 1841, only to rise again to $13,594,480 in 1842. With a few exceptions, it has increased every year since. Treasury notes were issued each year from 1838 to 1842. With the exception of the issue of 1841, which used the same design as those for 1837, notes released during the intervening years undoubtedly were the same.

An emergency issue of Treasury notes was authorized by the Act of July 22, 1846, because a deficit of $12,587,000 was anticipated if the war with Mexico continued. These Treasury notes were produced by Rawdon, Wright, Hatch & Edson (RWH&E), the firm established when Tracy R. Edson joined RW&H. Notes in this issue are more attractive and feature different engraved subjects.

Another increase in the national debt was announced on July 1, 1847.

On the previous January 28, two-year notes were issued displaying new, attractive engravings; however, the earlier versions of Mercury, Wealth and Justice were revived for the one-year notes.

The Act of December 23, 1857, authorized $100, $500 and $1,000 Treasury notes. These three denominations are even more attractive than the previous ones.

Only $1,000 notes, which are the same as the 1857 notes, have survived from the emission under the Act of December 1860. The next issue of Treasury notes took place in 1861. The two-year notes, prepared by the National Bank Note Company, are the most attractive of those mentioned thus far. As a cost-saving measure requested by the U.S. Treasury, printers of the 60-day $50 and $100 notes were told to once again revive our old friends, Mercury, Wealth and Justice.

Although in 1858 RWH&E was only one of seven firms that united to form American Bank Note Company (ABNCo), all the $50 and $100 Treasury notes of 1861 bore the imprint of RWH&E. On the other hand, an ABNCo overprint was included on the 60-day $500 note, a Vignettes (from left) of Wealth, Justice and Mercury were featured on one-year Treasury notes issued under the Act of October 12, 1837.

A redeemed and canceled 1842 Treasury note (left) and an 1861 specimen note (right) feature the vignettes Mercury, Wealth and Justice. The specimen note bears the imprint of Rawdon, Wright, Hatch and Edson as well as that of American Bank Note Company, even though it was prepared several years after RWH&E united with six other companies to form ABNCo.

hybrid that carried the same design as the 1857 $500 note, but with a change in portrait.

Today, when one invests in a Treasury note, no engraved instrument is issued—only a receipt. In 1861, when the national debt was $90,582,417, the U.S. Treasury decided it would save money on short-term, 60-day certificates by not spending funds for new engravings; however, it did supply investors with an engraved Treasury note. Within 136 years, we have gone from engraved Treasury notes—old in design as some were—to nothing more than a statement, similar to a receipt for a bank deposit. •

A GLIMPSE AT OUR INVENTORY . . .

1) 1800 Draped Bust, Heraldic Eagle Half Dime. NGC MS65. What a lovely coin! The feeling of well preserved antiquity resonates into one's soul upon viewing this beauty! It is a little "gem." The surface shows a gunmetal blue look with wisps of rose and gold in the background. This is a short five year only variety and very scarce in mint state grades. Walter Breen wrote of this date: "The only date of this type which can be had in mint state, well struck, without many years' waiting." Note the term "years." We strongly suggest that if you are putting an elite portfolio together that you seriously consider purchasing this coin. $25,000

2) 1795 Flowing Hair Half Dollar. NGC AU58. O-105. Short two year only type design. A great year for die varieties as 19 obverse dies and 22 reverse dies were used making for 32 separate varieties. A rich field of interest. A handsome piece with tinges of sea green and gold showing through a pleasing charcoal toning. Detail is extraordinary with just the slightest touch of rub to keep it from a mint state grade. These early dates are real collector coins and always in demand. $10,750

THE SECRET OF MAKING A 520 PERCENT ANNUAL RETURN ON YOUR RARE COIN INVESTMENTS

AND 26 OTHER OF THE MOST CLOSELY GUARDED SECRETS OF THE RARE COIN INDUSTRY

Guaranteed Results: I Want to Offer You a Proposition Where I Take All the Risk!

Order My New Book The 27 Most Closely Guarded Secrets of the Rare Coin Industry at the Special Price of $69.95. Use the Strategies in My Book for ONE FULL YEAR. If you are not absolutely, overwhelmingly, totally and almost uncontrollably convinced that my methods and strategies have made or saved you at least TEN TIMES the cost of my book, return it one year from now for a full refund!

Dear Friend:

Some investors almost always make money in the rare coin market. The difference between winning and losing is an EDUCATION.

Consumer advocate and numismatic author Scott Travers says . . . "The rare coin market is an ocean of hungry sharks waiting for a powerless victim into whom they can sink their teeth." Indeed the rare coin market can be cruel. However, the rare coin market holds tremendous opportunity for those more educated than the masses.

Although most investors lose money investing in the rare coin market, BELIEVE IT OR NOT, some investors almost always make money. Personally, I made fortunes in free-falling bear markets.

THE KEY TO BEING A SUCCESSFUL RARE COIN INVESTOR IS BEING ARMED WITH MARKET KNOWLEDGE.

I AM GOING TO HELP YOU BECOME A RARE COIN SHARK BY TEACHING YOU MY MOST CLOSELY GUARDED SECRETS.

First, I can cut out the biggest cause of investor loss: A profit-hungry rare coin dealer that sells you coins at unconscionable markups. I can show you how to buy coins at WHOLESALE dealer prices instead of paying RETAIL.

Second, I can show you which classic U.S. rarities professional investors buy for maximum profit potential. Most dealers sell coins which are the easiest to acquire and coins that they want to dump.

Third, I will show you how to sell your coins for RETAIL prices direct to the end user, the collector. Buying at WHOLESALE and selling at RETAIL is how some successful investors always make money.

For over 20 years I have been in the rare coin business. I am considered to be one of the most respected, trusted and more knowledgeable experts in the field of numismatics. I have an impeccable reputation for honesty, integrity, competency and financial strength in the numismatic industry.

Many of you will recognize my name. Most of you can benefit from my experience. I can teach you how to minimize your downside, maximize your upside and always ensure that your decision regarding a numismatic transaction is the most astute decision you can make concerning your collecting and/or economic objectives.

A PROVEN SYSTEM OF BUYING AND SELLING COINS

To comprehensively educate both rare coin collectors and investors, I have written an enlightening and controversial book called: The 27 Most Closely Guarded Secrets of the Rare Coin Industry. Nothing like it has ever been written before. My book will relate to you the most decisive, no-nonsense strategies for getting more out of your commitment to coin collecting or investing. Now, for the first time you can learn what most dealers don't want you to know. Written in the most simple, understandable, easy to apply language possible, I talk about:

- THE SECRET TO MAKING A 520% ANNUAL RETURN ON YOUR RARE COIN INVESTMENTS—The strategy I will teach you is simple, but often overlooked and seldom utilized except by the most successful industry insiders. You can make a profit regardless of market conditions. Insiders know and utilize this secret profit in both bull and bear markets.
- MISTAKES—almost every coin investor with which I have consulted is guilty of no less than 10 major mistakes. I will teach you in intimate detail how to avoid major mistakes that most investors make.
- SCIENTIFIC INVESTING—A rare coin fund manager buys an 1895-O Quarter graded MS-68 for $37,500 in the raging bull market of 1988. An offer of over $200,000 was reported on the coin in a free-falling bull market 24 months later. Learn the secret of "waking up your sleepers" and how some investors make a killing by creatively promoting their coins.
- SURVEYS AND CHARTS—I will examine which coins REALLY have appreciated in value. Learn which coins have gone up thousands of percentages over the years.
- WHAT MAKES A COIN VALUABLE—You will become an expert at appraising coins.
- ARBITRAGES—Savvy traders take advantage of many arbitrages in the rare coin market. Learn what they are, and how you can profit from them.

- TIME BOMBS—You will learn to recognize the coins you own (or are considering buying) which, in the near future, may develop unattractive toning. These coins will probably depreciate tremendously, so if you own any of these coins, you should sell them immediately.
- THE GRADING SERVICES—I'll talk about how accurate the grading services really are. Included in this secret is an update on how dealers make huge profits upgrading certified coins. Finally, you will learn to disregard dealer comments that a coin is worth more if it's certified by a specific service.
- CONSPIRACIES IN THE MARKETPLACE—You will learn about some dealers' inside trading and possible anti-trust practices to control the price of certain coins.
- THE STORY OF THE DOCTOR THAT BOUGHT A COIN FOR $235,000 AND SOLD IT FOUR MONTHS LATER FOR $1,100,000—This doctor's experience was the rule, not the exception. Two other examples of this doctor's activities include purchasing a coin for $10,000 and selling it three months later for $29,000 and purchasing a coin for $15,000 and selling it seven months later for $100,000.
- HOW TO BUY RARE COINS—Learn what a SOURCE FUND is and how to buy coins at better prices than you ever thought possible.
- HOW TO SELL YOUR COINS AT EXCLUSIVE GALLERY RETAIL PRICES—You will discover that marketing is the "ultimate financial leverage" in getting top dollar for your coins.
- RARE COINS AND THE GOVERNMENT—Learn how the Federal Trade Commission and other government agencies fight rare coin fraud. Special tips are included for law enforcement officers and attorneys.
- Plus much, much more valuable advice.

SPECIAL BONUS: If you place your order for The 27 Most Closely Guarded Secrets of the Rare Coin Industry within the next 10 days, I will also include the following two SPECIAL REPORTS free of charge. You will receive: BUY, SELL, HOLD AND 12 Ways to Get 20% to 1230% More For Your Coins When You Sell.

The 27 Most Closely Guarded Secrets of the Rare Coins Industry is the ultimate guide on buying and selling coins.

The information presented is based on hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of my personal time and my experience buying and selling millions of dollars worth of coins. The wonderful education you'll receive and the profitable ideas and opportunities you will learn about can make you many thousands, tens of hundreds of thousands—even millions each and every year. And you can't get this knowledge or expert information anywhere else. Since I now charge $1,000 an hour as a consultant, I initially planned on selling the book for $295 figuring all my training material would make or save the average numismatic consumer ten to one hundred times that figure. However, quite honestly, I am looking for back-end business. I want to represent you on all your buy or sell transactions.

Be My Numismatic Valentine

MOVE OVER, LOVE token collectors, there's more to maudlin numismatic expressions straight from the heart than mere engravings on the backs of pocket change—expressions no less sentimental, no less imaginative and no less artistically rendered. It took a brave heart for the beau of Miss Elsie Sellars of St. John, Kansas, to send his valentine back in 1909. It was a check drawn on the Bank of Roses, payable to the young lady of his dreams in the sum of 100,000 scents (of white roses).

The check, perhaps never cashed, was printed on one side of a post card—for all to see along the route it took through the mail and for the good-humored postman not to kid Miss Elsie about her beau upon delivery. The card was not an exception to the eloquence of expression during the last turn of century. While such cards may not have been the norm, they were not so scarce as to prevent us today from building a tangential collection guaranteed to complement any collection of love tokens.

Serious post card collectors will tell you that, if you are interested and willing to search diligently, a sizable collection of numismatically related post cards can be assembled. Collectors will find that scores of realistic, imitation bank notes once prevailed. For example, one card, drawn on the "Bank of Love," was so close in appearance to its genuine Bank of England £5 note counterpart, that the queen's solicitors forced the recall of the post card and banned further printing. Their concern was not that some lovesick youth would try to cash the card, but that the engravings would help facilitate counterfeiting by less amorous culprits.

Across the Atlantic, it was "Monkey see, monkey do." An American card publisher thought enough of the British idea for the imitation bank note card and so little of the United States Secret Service's attention to detail that the publisher followed suit and produced an American edition using imitations of U.S. dollars of the day. The Secret Service reacted with the same complete lack of artistic appreciation shown by the British authorities; the cards were seized, and the stock destroyed.

Checks and bank notes were not the only numismatically related subjects for valentine cards, nor was the day of heart's expression the only holiday to be so noted. Christmas, in fact, proved to be an even more popular time to so observe. For the thrifty, what better way to send money than in the form of a copy?

Contemporary to the bank note post cards were "purse cards." These reached their height of popularity during the Victorian period, from the early 1870s and into the beginning of the following decade. They came in the form of embossed-paper purses for the ladies and paper wallets for the men. When opened, there was a wealth of funds to be found in imitation bank notes and/or checks, as well as embossed-foil gold and silver coins.

Some of these "checks" were drawn on the "Bank of Blessings," payable in "joys" and posted from "Blissville." It was not the mawkish sentimentality of these cards that brought their demise; it was their cost. Beaus probably found it cheaper to send the genuine article.

Like love tokens, pseudo-paper

In addition to love tokens, numismatic valentines can be found on post cards like the one sent to Miss Elsie Sellars of St. John, Kansas, in 1909. It was drawn on the Bank of Roses and payable in the sum of 100,000 scents (of white roses).

money messages from the heart also emanated from the front-line trenches and the prison camps of World War I. One popular expression of Yuletide sentimentality can be credited to Frank D. Hawkes, a member of the British Expeditionary Force (BEF) in France.

In 1918, after the signing of the armistice that brought an end to the Great War, thousands of Allied troops remained in Europe assigned to occupation duty. Bored and, perhaps, with little to do with his time, the artistically talented Hawkes re-drew a French 5-franc note. He replaced the allegorical figures to each side of the face with an American doughboy to the left and a British Tommy to the right. In lieu of seals, he placed "57th Div." to one side and "Xmas 1918" to the other. "Remembrance" and "Good Wishes" were added as the signatories to the bill. Then, in the bottom lefthand corner as a professional courtesy, Hawkes added, "With apologies to the French 5 franc note."

The manufacture of numismatically related post cards was not limited to the major card companies of the day—Miss Elsie Sellars' card was published by Henrietta Armbruster of Denver, Colorado. Nor were post cards, and imitation wallets and purses the sole avenue of numismatic sentimentality. Collectors should never underestimate the imaginations of couples in love. So you should look for imitations of wills, checks, IOUs, bankbooks and certificates of deposit, as almost any monetary document has its sentimental counterpart.

Catalogs Offer Bargains, Fun and Hustles

I ALWAYS ENJOY looking at all the gift catalogs with numismatic items that cross my desk. Many of them actually are quite entertaining and useful, while others are nothing more than an invitation to buy overpriced and shabbily presented coins. At the end of last year, there were more such publications than ever before. I saved four for comparison.

The first is the Sears "Shop at Home" catalog. It started out with a set of Lincoln cents from 1941 to 1958. At $19.95 this seemed like a bargain until I discovered all the coins were in circulated condition. A fully uncirculated set can be purchased for $29.95 in the 1996-97 SilverTowne gift catalog I had on hand. In another comparison, silver bullion Eagles cost $19.95 at Sears and $7.95 at SilverTowne. A 1-ounce, enameled medal with bezel and chain was $50 in the Sears catalog and $29.95 in the other.

The differences continued page after page. Both offered a nice selection of collector items, jewelry and novelties, but the prices often were double or more in offers directed at the non-numismatic market. Both catalogs were numismatically accurate and attractively presented. The offers made by Sears had catchy, descriptive text for each item, while the SilverTowne listings were simplified descriptions best understood by experienced collectors.

One item in the SilverTowne offerings caught my eye. It was a full set of silver bullion dollars from 1986 to 1996 for $108.95. The same set is promoted in newspaper ads around the country at $199, where they are touted as being "available only through this special offering." I guess they hadn't seen the same catalogs I had.

Another catalog that impressed me favorably was from the Israel Government Coins & Medals Corporation. It offered a wide selection of coins, medals, jewelry and other numismatically related items. Prices were not inexpensive, but the quality and unique nature of these items seemed well worth the prices asked. The coin jewelry in particular was exquisite. The United States Olympic coins offered in the catalog, however, are available at discount prices from many U.S. dealers.

The fourth selection worth noting appeared in the Delta Air Lines "SkyMall" catalog. It carried two full pages of items ranging from Lincoln cents to gold quarter eagles. The set of cents from 1941 to 1958 cost $19.95 and sounded very much like the one sold by Sears. Both offered a gold-plated Walking Liberty half dollar mounted in a bezel, with a chain. At $97 in one catalog and $19.95 in the other, there is quite a spread. In one offering, you can even buy a gallon of "Professional Coin Cleaner" for only $19.95. This, they say, will clean approximately 5,000 gold and silver coins, if you are interested.

These comments are not intended to endorse or condemn any mail-order catalog advertisers, but mentioned to point out that there are differences in all offerings. Whenever you buy such material, you should always do your own comparison shopping and look for the best items and prices.

File #495

Did you know that the American silver dollar was last seen more than 60 years ago? Oh, sure, you may have seen one of yours last week, but this ad wasn't counting on that. It says the Peace dollar disappeared from circulation in 1935 and has not been seen since!

If you missed out on getting one back then, this advertiser will sell you one in Very Fine condition for only $17.50 plus $2.95 postage. You also can buy a whole collection for $15 each plus postage; there are five coins in a "collection," and these are somehow made of ".900 pure silver." You will have to hurry. This offer is good only for the next 15 days. If you miss out, I know plenty of dealers who will be happy to sell the same thing for half the price.

File #496

Have you ever thought about recycling your gold teeth? It's not something I ever considered, but an ad that appeared in several newspapers makes it sound as if this is a rather common occurrence. You are invited to get needed cash by selling your gold teeth. You can complete the entire transaction by mail. It's all quite simple.

For many people, they say, it's like found money. A typical gold tooth brings between $5 and $20, depending on the amount of gold. "The dollars really add up," the advertiser says. This is big business.

Next time you need cash for that rare coin you have your eye on, this may be the answer. Simply pull out a couple of your molars and ship them off to this enterprising smelter. Or ask your dentist for some leftovers.

File #497

If you are a golfer and coin collector, you won't be able to resist this offer—at least that is what the ad says. You can now "Mark your ball in style—legally!" by using a silver coin from the Isle of Man. The coin is the size of a dime, and features the head of Queen Elizabeth on one side and a golf ball and two clubs on the other. It is a genuine, legal-tender 5-pence coin of the British island, but of course not used in circulation because it is a silver proof made for collectors.

This coin will make a great conversation piece when you use it to mark your ball. I do not know how, or why, it is any more "legal" than any other kind of marker. The ad does not tell you that the coin will not retain its proof finish long if it's used on the green. If you simply can't live without one, the price is $34.95, and the advertiser claims its prices are unbeatable.

File #498

Most advanced collectors either have, or would like to own, a specimen of the silver coinage of Alexander the Great. Considered classics of numismatics and the ancient world, these coins fortunately are relatively common. Even the large, impressive, silver tetradrachms are regularly available for $250 to $350 for high-grade specimens.

These beautiful, rugged ancient coins are about the size of a half dollar, only much thicker. Alexander tetradrachms were made nearly 2,300 years ago and used throughout the vast empire ruled by Alexander III, King of Macedonia. If you are new to the world of ancient coins, I would recommend such a coin for your first purchase. You will cherish it forever.

Having said all that, I would not especially recommend that you buy one of these coins now offered in a special wooden frame together with a reproduction of a bust of Alexander

THE SOURCE FOR RARE U.S. GOLD COINS

If you are a collector, dealer, investor or marketer who has purchased rare U.S. gold coins in the past several years, chances are pretty good that at some point, we were involved in the transaction.

We offer one of the largest and most diverse inventories of 18th and 19th Century U.S. gold coins in the country. We specialize in choice, problem-free issues from the Charlotte, Dahlonega, Carson City and New Orleans Mints, and regularly wholesale to most of the leading dealers in the nation.

Together, we have over thirty years of experience in numismatics. Doug Winter has written the standard references on Charlotte, New Orleans and Carson City gold coins, while Lee Minshull has bought and sold tens of millions of dollars worth of the rarest and most important gold coins in existence.

If you would like to eliminate the middleman and go straight to the source, we encourage you to give us a call. We'll be happy to send you a copy of our latest price list. And if you're just getting started, we'll include a complimentary copy of Doug Winter's acclaimed "Connoisseur's Guide to United States Gold Coins."

the Great. As beautiful as that presentation is, the price of $895 plus $25 shipping is just too extravagant for the average collector. The manufacturer has produced only 49 of these impressive mountings, and probably will sell them all. They are beautiful, to say the least, but they sure are expensive.

If you do buy one of these coins, you can rest assured that it is genuine and a nice specimen. If you do not particularly need the ornate frame, you might consider buying the same, basic coin from a dealer who specializes in ancients.

I saved an ad from last year as a test to see how accurate it would prove to be. It predicted that when the new $100 bills were introduced, the government would call in all the old money and then know how much cash each citizen had hidden away. The only way to avoid this kind of cash accounting, it said, was to turn your cash in for gold coins. It also surmised that the rush for gold would cause prices to rise and that the precious metal would jump in value, as it did in 1979-80.

I did not send for the booklet the advertiser wanted to give me with my first purchase. It would have told me about the "Great Currency crisis" of 1996 and how I could protect myself and double or triple my investment. I did not send for any of the advertised gold bullion coins either—they were 1/4-ounce gold Eagles priced at a whopping $129 each plus $15 shipping.

The funny thing about this promotion was that it offered only one coin per customer, and the supplies were limited. I don't see how anyone could protect much of their "hidden wealth" by buying just one coin, even if it did double in value. Oh, by the way, you still can buy the same coins from any coin dealer for $105 each. •

PCI® CUSTOMERS TELL WHY MORE PEOPLE ARE TURNING TO PCI®

A professional coin information, grading, encapsulation & authentication service.

Serving the numismatic needs of the collector, investor & dealer since 1989 . . .
without the restraints and expense of a required industry network.

I have been a serious collector since 1969, and, of course, have my own opinions about grading, which happen to correspond almost identically to the standards of the ANA Grading Guide. I have, however, a number of your "slabs"—all of which I am very pleased with.

Unlike those "other" 3rd party graders/slabbers, you guys seem to be very consistent in your grading, and do so while meeting my personal grading standards.

— Ron

Thank you for all your assistance this year. Your services have been a godsend for people like me who are on a limited budget, but still need coin grading services at a reasonably low price. The services provided (to me) allowed me to get suspect coins graded accurately when I believed they were graded inaccurately, as well as other discrepancies in coin dealers affirm oaths of authenticity. Let me just say—keep up the good work in keeping the numismatic hobby honest.

John

Thank you for taking the time to grade my coins. I think your company is the fastest and most accurate of all the grading services. I usually put my coins in plastic mylar flips for you to grade. However, some of these coins I bought through mail order, and I was afraid they would not take them back if they were tampered with. The 1824/2 cent is one example. Thank you for your understanding in this matter.

— S.A.B.

Just wanted to jot a note to you today and thank you for your kind attention in the matter of my 1962 "Cameo" Franklin half. I certainly felt that you folks went the extra mile to make sure that I remained a satisfied customer.

I tell the story to just about everyone I run into . . . just to illustrate the kind of effort that goes on at PCI in order to provide good customer service. I want everyone to know how good I think PCI is. Keep up the great work!

— D.L.

Though I still prefer accurately graded raw coins, which are my primary purchases, I have purchased a number of slabs from various 3rd party institutions, including PCI. Of all I've seen from what I have purchased, I believe that a PCI graded and encapsulated coin is of better quality than any of the other companies. You may consider that a compliment, as that is what is intended.

— R.B.

Several months ago, you made one of my coins even more special than it already was. It was a 1909 Lincoln Cent, the first one in my collection and one that I have had for about 30 years. You noted on the holder that it was "Robert's First Coin," and I thought that was very nice of you. Thank you for the extra consideration and "class."

— Robert

For details, contact the ANA Convention Department.

Kendrick Receives Presidential Award

At the Hawaii State Numismatic Association's 33rd Anniversary Convention in Oahu, held November 14-17, ANA President Kenneth Bressett bestowed the Presidential Award on Marion F. Kendrick. A relatively new member of the ANA, Kendrick is active in local numismatics and, along with members of the Honolulu Coin Club, is responsible for organizing the highly successful Hawaii Collectors Expo.

Discover Cleveland: A Remarkable City

A lot has changed in Cleveland, Ohio, since the American Numismatic Association last held a convention there a generation ago. Those attending the ANA's National Money Show in the city on the shores of Lake Erie, March 20-22, will be treated to a unforgettable event in a revitalized community. Billing itself as the "New American City," Cleveland has developed into a prime destination town filled with the unique and the appealing.

Having celebrated its bicentennial in 1996, Cleveland now is in the midst of a renaissance. It is a five-time "All American City" award winner, and a virtual dynamo of Fortune 500 companies, world-acclaimed cultural amenities, recreational treasures and fascinating attractions. All this and much more is within a 500-mile radius of 43 percent of the nation's population.

A few of the many attractions Cleveland offers include the recently opened Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, which celebrates the sights, sounds and emotions of artists, songwriters, producers and radio broadcasters in a hands-on, interactive museum; the RainForest at Cleveland Metroparks Zoo, one of the world's largest and most complete exhibits of its type; the Cleveland Museum of Art, one of eight museums at University Circle; and the Galleria, an enclosed shopping area downtown.

ANA Auctioneer Seeks U.S. and World Coins for New York Sale

Heritage Numismatic Auctions of Dallas, Texas, is seeking consignments for what is expected to be a fabulous auction at the 106th Anniversary Convention scheduled for July 30-August 3, 1997, in New York City. Heritage is the official auctioneer for ANA anniversary conventions through 1999.

Heritage Auction Director Bob Merrill explains, "This will be the numismatic event in the numismatic city. We're anticipating an overwhelming auction, and consignments already are coming in. For example, we have a nice half-cent collection; to complement it, we'd like to obtain a comprehensive collection of large cents."

Heritage is looking for consignments of premium individual coins or lots valued at $1,000 or more. Merrill notes that the firm is particu-

ANA Candidates' Forum Set for Cleveland

ANA President Kenneth Bressett encourages members seeking election to the Board of Governors to participate in the Candidates' Forum, scheduled for Thursday evening, March 20, in conjunction with the ANA's National Money Show in Cleveland. All nine seats on the Board will be filled in the biennial election in June.

New York's a Great Place for Club Meetings

The ANA Convention Department is accepting requests from member clubs and affiliated organizations for meeting space at the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City, July 30-August 3. Meetings will be held at the Marriott Marquis Hotel, which also is the site of the bourse and exhibits.

Clubs that have met in conjunction with past ANA conventions will receive a meeting reservation form in the mail. For groups that conducted meetings at last year's convention in Denver, the Convention Department will attempt to hold the same day of the week, time and meeting-room size until notice of confirmation or cancellation is received. The ANA will try to accommodate clubs to the best of its ability; however, space is limited and clubs should contact the Convention

Department as soon as possible.

To avoid conflicts that might arise from the abundance of meetings conducted in the early morning or evening, meetings also can be scheduled during bourse hours. For additional information about how your group can hold a meeting during the New York gathering, contact the Convention Department.

Foundation Donates Vietnam Commemoratives

Dona Hildebrand (left), representing the Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation, presents to ANA Curator Robert W. Hoge a three-piece set of commemorative silver dollars struck by the United States Mint in 1994 to benefit the National Prisoners of War Museum, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial and the Women in Military Service for America Memorial. The latter currently is under construction at the main entrance of Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, D.C., and is scheduled to be dedicated on October 18. The commemorative coins previously were not represented in the ANA Museum cabinet.

of Fame and Museum in this "New American City" will permeate the show, from the bourse to the sock-hop dinner.

Plans are under way to name the aisles on the bourse after inductees in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, which is within walking distance of the Cleveland Convention Center, site of the National Money Show. The casual dinner on Friday evening, March 21, will be a swinging time for all.

Numismatic medleys will fill the educational program schedule, which includes the ANA's highly respected U.S. Coin Grading Seminar, March 17-19 at the Renaissance Hotel, with ANA authenticator J.P.

Martin and professional numismatist Keith Love; the Numismatic Theatre on Friday and Saturday, March 21-22; and Boy and Girl Scout merit badge clinics on Saturday, March 22.

For more information, contact the Convention Department.

Club and Local Club. Deadline for receipt of entries at the ANA is April 30, 1997. For a complete set of rules and guidelines for submission, call the ANA's Fax-on-Request Service, toll-free 800/910-7224, and enter Code #201550; or contact the Publications Department.

NY Convention Sponsors and Patrons Sought

In an effort to help underwrite a variety of special events and programs at the Association's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City, July 30-August 3, the ANA is asking individuals and clubs to lend their support as sponsors and convention patrons.

Four levels of tax-deductible patron support have been established: Copper ($25+), Nickel ($50+), Silver ($100+), Gold ($250+) and Platinum ($500+). In recognition of their assistance, donors will be listed in the ANA's official convention program, along with their city and state; bourse table numbers will be noted for those patrons who are dealers at the New York show. Checks, made payable to "ANA 106th Anniversary Convention," should be directed to the Convention Department. Contributions also can be charged by MasterCard or Visa.

In addition, numismatic dealers and other corporate entities are invited to underwrite the convention as a whole ("Title" sponsorship) or to support specific activities ("Event" sponsorship), such as the Numismatic Theatre or the World Series of Numismatics.

For more details about convention contributions, contact Patrons Chairman David L. Ganz at 212/517-5500, or ANA Development Director Miles Kessler at 800/367-9723.

Pennsylvania's Hermitage Numismatic Society (HNS) held its 3rd Annual Coin Show on November 17, 1996. Attended by more than 300 eager collectors, many of them young men and women, the event was a decided success. Ten dealers from Ohio and Pennsylvania offered an array of numismatic items and reported strong sales. Reports Jim Myhra, show chairman and HNS president, "It is encouraging to see so many young people getting involved in coin shows and collecting again."

Jacksonville Coin Club are particularly proud of fellow collector Dick Hammel, who won best-of-show honors at the Tennessee State Numismatic Society's convention in Chattanooga in October. The subject of his prize-winning display was "Florida Tokens."

"Are modern commemorative coins worth buying?" "Can you easily spot a counterfeit coin?" "Are toned coins graded differently?" If you answered "no" to any of these questions, then you might learn a thing or two at the "Hobby Improvement Seminar" to be conducted by the Numismatic Association of Southern California (NASC) on February 22. Held during the Long Beach Coin & Collectibles Expo at the Long Beach Convention & Entertainment Center, the seminar will be instructed by ANA Vice President Anthony Swiatek, a professional numismatist and expert in U.S. commemorative coins. The four-hour program is free to NASC members, $25 for all others. For reservations, contact Walter Ostromecki at 818/342-6304.

The Hawaii State Numismatic Association held its 33rd Anniversary Convention on November 14-17 at the Queen Kapiolani Hotel on Oahu. Helen Carmody, HSNA member and an ANA governor, notes that "although the paid attendance of 1,205 was down from last year due to unusually heavy rain, the convention was considered a success.

The 80-dealer bourse offered inventory [that appealed] to collectors and mainland and local dealers alike."

ANA Treasurer Adna G. Wilde Jr. never misses a show. "HSNA is always a great convention, and the educational programs are wonderful," he says.

Grading Mint State Peace Dollars

THE PEACE DOLLAR is one of the most popular U.S. coin series, since Mint State examples are plentiful and relatively inexpensive. In fact, the only coin in this series that is scarce in Mint State condition is 1934-S, although 1921 Peace dollars are valued highly for their one-year type status and 1928-P dollars are desirable because of their unusually low mintage.

Other dates carry only modest premiums in lower grades, although these advance somewhat in grades of Extremely Fine and About Uncirculated. Grading obviously worn examples is not difficult, as there are clear illustrations and text in Official A.N.A. Grading Standards for United States Coins.

The real problem lies in distinguishing very lightly circulated Peace dollars from those that truly are Mint State. Perhaps no other series has such a high percentage of specimens that are almost, but not quite, Uncirculated. These usually were purchased as gifts or for some promotional campaign and often were deposited in banks as quickly as they were received. Since most Americans didn't actually use silver dollars in daily commerce, such revolving traffic was common until the late 1950s, when people first began to consciously save these coins.

Distinguishing between a Mint State Peace dollar and a "slider," or lightly circulated piece, should be fairly simple once one has seen examples of both. Sadly, many collectors who obtain "raw" (uncertified) coins may be buying sliders, not suspecting that they're not the Mint State coins advertised. However, purchasing one or more examples certified as Mint State will enable many collectors to quickly recognize the slight dulling effect of luster loss typical of sliders.

Once it has been established that a Peace dollar is indeed Uncirculated, the challenge of assigning a numerical grade from 60 to 70 remains. The vast majority of Mint State examples fall within the range of MS-60 to MS-62. This is not reflected in the certified population data, as such low-end coins usually are not worth submitting for grading and encapsulation.

Most collectors prefer Peace dollars that grade at least MS-63, designated as "select" by the ANA grading guide and "choice" by most dealers. Such coins should have full luster, but they also may have a number of small contact marks and perhaps one or two larger ones. In grades MS-63 and lower, a grading service such as Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC) does not weigh sharpness of strike heavily. A smart buyer can shop around for a specimen that displays the requisite qualities for a particular grade level with the additional bonus of a sharp strike. This will be quite challenging for San Francisco Mint dollars of the 1920s, as these are nearly all softly struck in one or more places.

Most coins in this series are inexpensive in MS-63 and higher grades when compared with their values before 1990. The common dates are readily obtainable in grades as high as MS-65, and collectors may want to take advantage of this fact when planning a collection of these handsome coins. The ANA grading guide designates the MS-65 grade as "choice" although the coin trade typically calls this level "gem."

The language doesn't really matter as much as the number, since the grading services are quite consistent about what qualifies a Peace dollar as MS-65. It must have full luster and minimal contact marks, none of them too obvious. The location of contact marks also is critical, since the Peace dollar's shallow and fairly plain obverse is particularly vulnerable. A prominent mark on Liberty's cheek or in the field to either side of her portrait can lead to downgrading, as can a deep mark on the eagle or in the field to its left. Nicks or abrasions through the date also are damaging to a coin's grade.

As with most coin types, attractive toning can enhance the Peace dollar's market value, and this is factored into its certified grade. As mentioned, a coin's strike is less important, though one certified MS-65 should be reasonably well struck. •

Look Out—Oxidation Can Creep Up on You!

UNDERSTANDING THE causes of oxidation and how to prevent it are key points in maintaining the value of your collection. Oxidation (aka “toning”) can be attractive (and valuable), but left to its own devices eventually will take over and ruin most silver and copper surfaces. Be aware of it, be careful of it, but above all, understand it.

Q. I stopped collecting coins about 20 years ago, but my interest has been rekindled largely as a result of some of the Mint’s recent commemorative coin programs. I never sold my collection; it has been locked in a safe-deposit box that has been opened maybe twice in the meantime, but not recently. I’m afraid to open the box, for fear that the supposedly stable environment inside may be disturbed. Am I correct in thinking this, or am I worried about a risk that doesn’t exist?

—R.C., Virginia

A. You’re worried about a risk that doesn’t exist, but at the same time you’re not aware of a real risk. The environment inside your box may be “stable,” but that’s not necessarily good for your coins. For example, if it is too warm and/or too humid, your coins may already be damaged, even though the box has not been opened for a long time.

Much has been learned about coin preservation over the past two decades, and many fine products now are available to help you preserve your collection. (For more specific recommendations, refer to some of my columns from the past year or two.) Some possible options are mylar flips, lucite holders, snap-together 2 x 2-inch plastic holders,

2 x 2-inch cardboard holders, Koin-tains™, and even “slabs” issued by the grading services. This is by no means a complete list, and each type of holder has its specific advantages and disadvantages.

The three requirements for proper storage of your collection in a safe-deposit box or elsewhere should be moderate temperature, low humidity, and the use of protective holders to minimize each coin’s exposure to the atmosphere. Many people place their collections in safe-deposit boxes and forget about them, as you did. In the majority of these cases, no harm is done, but I recommend that a collection stored this way be checked at least every several months. This way, any developing problems can be spotted before they become too large, and steps can be taken to correct them.

Q. With all the recent information in some of the hobby publications about coins toning within slabs, I am, quite frankly, worried. I have bought many slabbed coins and felt more secure in my purchase of them because the grading is usually guaranteed to some extent and because I always believed that the slab was a very secure storage method—inert and well-sealed. Was I wrong? What do you think of this?

—E.S., Florida

A. By and large, tests recently conducted on encapsulated, or “slabbed,” coins involved exposing them to very high concentrations of known oxidizing agents to see if they would oxidize. They did, which seems to have been a surprise to many in the hobby, although probably not to the grading services.

These third-party grading services have always maintained that the plastic used in their slabs is chemically inert, but have never made any claims that their holders were completely sealed against outside air and pollutants. That is to say, the plastic used to construct the holder will not harm the coin and will help protect it from outside pollutants.

In the case of the aforementioned tests, the folks that conducted them performed a great service by demonstrating that you can’t just put a coin in a slab and forget about it, as many people previously seemed to think. However, slabs do provide storage and protection that is superior to most other forms available; just be aware that encapsulation is not perfect. Coins not in holders, or coins in most other types of holders, would have fared far worse.

I am happy to answer your questions about coin storage and preservation. Send them to me in care of The Numismatist; fax 719/634-4085; Internet anaedi@money.org; or CompuServe 74212,554.

Authenticating the 1916-D Dime

A favorite among collectors of United States coins, the 1916-D dime also is relished by unscrupulous individuals in search of a fast buck. No struck counterfeits of this collectable coin are known, but many deceptive alterations exist. A knowledge of the diagnostics of genuine specimens is your best defense.

According to Denver Mint records, four obverse and four reverse dies were used to produce some 264,000 D-mintmark dimes from about September through November 1916. The design and date are consistent for all produced during this period, as both were hubbed on the working dies. The only element that varies is the mintmark, which, because it was punched into the dies by hand, differs in position and depth and/or shows doubling.

Consequently, 1916-D dimes are authenticated by mintmark style and position only. No die polish, die cracks or other diagnostics distinguish the four sets of dies from one another or from those used at the Philadelphia Mint. Fake 1916-D dimes generally are created by altering the date, making a "sandwich" from two different specimens, or adding a mintmark.

The most likely candidates for date alteration are 1917, 1918 and 1919 D-mintmark dimes. This feat is accomplished by moving metal around the last digit to form a 6. Fortunately, such date alterations are fairly rare and reasonably easy to detect, if you know what to look for. The mintmark on 1918-D and 1919-D coins are of a different style than that used for 1916 dimes. The 1916-D and 1917-D dimes, on the other hand, share the same mintmark style but not the same position.

"Sandwich" alterations usually involve two genuine coins: a 1916 "P" or "S" obverse and a 1917-45 "D" reverse. The opposing sides are machined off, and the halves glued or soldered together to create what appears to be a 1916 dime with a D mintmark. Tipoffs are a seam along the edge of the coin; lack of a ringing sound when the edge is tapped or the coin is dropped; and incorrect weight or mintmark style. Collectors also have been duped by two coins placed together in a holder and offered as a single 1916-D.

Philadelphia Mint 1916 dimes with added mintmarks are the most common form of alteration. The mintmark on genuine 1916-D dimes has a triangular opening and two, distinct serifs, although on worn specimens, the center of the "D" is likely to be filled. (The same style mintmark also was used for coinage from 1911 through mid 1917, with the exception of the Barber issues.)

Interestingly, the added mintmarks are not taken from genuine coins, but rather more likely punched in Genuine: On worn specimens, mintmark often appears to be filled.

"cookie cutter" fashion from thin sheets of silver. The mintmark is affixed to the coin using solder or glue. Added mintmarks often are too large and of too low relief, and lack the characteristic, squared-off serifs. Mintmarks also can be fabricated by mounding, scraping or engraving metal in the field.

Four mintmark positions have been documented for genuine 1916-D dimes. Each is described by its relation to the leaf at the left:

Genuine: Reverse Die #1.

Genuine: Reverse Die #2.

Genuine: Reverse Die #3.

Genuine: Reverse Die #4.

Reverse Die #1: Mintmark high, very near leaf.

Reverse Die #2: Mintmark double-punched, medium high, near leaf.

Reverse Die #3: Mintmark double-punched, medium low, far from leaf.

Reverse Die #4: Mintmark low, farther from leaf than #3.

Mintmarks on Dies #2 and #3 display a notch on the upper serif, which remains visible even in lower grades. Machine doubling on a mintmark also is a good indication of authenticity, as I have seen no alterations with this characteristic. Always inspect the juncture of the mintmark and the field for signs of a seam or discoloration. 1916-D dimes grading Extremely Fine or higher should be scrutinized carefully; added mintmarks seldom are found on coins grading less than Very Good. •

- Uses its network of numismatic experts on a consulting basis for those items requiring additional examination and opinions.
- Provides counterfeit diagnostics on non-genuine specimens.

- Provides additional information on membership services.

Authentication  Plus

Fee for Authentication  Plus

Those submitting coins for certification can request additional data, including, but not limited to: rarity, value, weight, diameter, specific gravity, variety, surface characteristics, reflectivity, originality, type of counterfeit, reed count, and recommended references for further research. List item number and questions on a separate sheet.

ADMINISTRATIVE

- Please submit items in easy access holders. Mark holders with matching submission numbers.

- Reexamination requires submission of the certified item and the certificate.
- Transfers require submission of original certificate (ANAAB will not reissue certificates bearing grade opinions).

Plagiarizing the Exalted Potentate

I wouldn't need a credit card, just $40 or so for Broadhind's lunch. Sonny's doesn't even recognize a Visa card, and Boscoe R. Broadhind never picked up a check in his life.

Sonny's, a Dallas "restaurant" noted for its barbecue since 1911, was the same as always, crowded with a mixture of men in Armani suits and worker bees in overalls. Ever present was the pungent scent of barbecued meat. As I approached Broadhind, I could not help but notice that he was invading the personal space of his waitress, telling her one of those self-promoting stories from 50 years ago.

"Sit down here, boy, you're just in time to buy me lunch," was the greeting from this semi-retired oddsmaker. In the South, or at least in the minds of those from the Old South, everyone is a "boy," even if they are 54. "Looks like you could use some Minoxidil—heh, heh."

"Say," Broadhind continued, "I was just reading the Dallas Morning News about where Robert Crandall's American Airlines has got to pay some California dude $19 million because he was looking at one of their signs at DFW Airport and ran into another car. Just shows what someone skilled in the circumvention of the law can do. Remember when I told you to get rid of those 'junque' clamp-on lights you used to use at lot viewing? Good thing, or you'd be sued next time one of those fell over and whacked somebody. I have been surveying some of your auction attendees, and I need to put you on the right railroad."

Broadhind was wound up now. I motioned for the waitress and pointed at a sliced sandwich on the menu while he continued.

"You know the Exalted Potentate of coin grading has set a standard that everybody wants to copy. You can't just go to auction viewing and have only 100-watt bulbs. Don't you know anything about electricity? Rumor has it that the E.P. sometimes looks at small coins with a 50-watt bulb, and that for type coins, he uses one of those 70-watt bulbs with the power of 75 watts. That's why you have got auction lot viewers wanting to know what kind of bulb is in the lamp. Why, what would you do if Joseph Mickley showed up to view lots? You need to diversify and meet each individual's needs. I know of one auction buyer who likes to look at coins under a bug light in order to get the bugs off the coin."

"What?" I interrupted.

"That's a joke boy, don't be so intense. Say, honey," Broadhind said turning to the waitress, "would you bring me another plate of ribs, some more beer, and some pie. And oh, an iced tea for my friend?"

Without pausing to catch his breath, Broadhind shifted his attention back to me and said, "Boy, you are like someone driving a '79 Ranchero, you are just outta touch. You've got people bringing their own lamps and bulbs to look at lots. Some people think the E.P. uses a Tensor® lamp. Others say he's got a pole lamp with five different kinds of bulbs, including some that are three-way bulbs. You better start thinking about these variables before you set up your next auction. What if the E.P. starts using a strobe light, a neon light, a spotlight, a search light, or just plain sunlight? You know others will follow. Best think this out before your competition beats you to it.

"And look at the auction viewing rooms you're setting up in. Why, the Exalted Potentate views coins in the sterile confines of his cave. He has voice-activated drapes that close upon command to create midnight at the oasis. The E.P. is on the cutting edge of technology. Why he may begin to use a laser. If Ben Franklin could invent lighting, General Electric or whatever, surely you could find some nostalgia store that sells pole lamps. Ask yourself, does the E.P. use a 3-power glass, a 5-power, or a moon scope? Bet you don't know, do you? That is why everyone is bringing a loupe that is endorsed by the E.P. He's getting a shoe contract next month, like Michael Jordan. Everyone knows that the E.P. gets all his coins upgraded. No, you're not doing your job. Ah, get that check, will ya? My turn next time."

Far Eastern Fraud: A Hollowed-Out Japanese Yen

As long as there have been coins, dishonest people have tried to alter or subvert them for their own advantage. Numismatists often encounter evidence of such nefarious practices.

Frequently, pieces in the form of false coins have been produced, intended to deceive recipients in commerce. At other times and places, genuine coins have been "adjusted" in an effort to remove and retain a portion of their value. In pre-modern times, edge clipping was a common phenomenon, a criminal activity particularly noted in medieval England. With the introduction of uniform, machine-made coins, a shift toward other types of tampering occurred.

During the heyday of international silver flow to the Far East (the 18th and 19th centuries), the low cost of coolie labor led to a fairly widespread custom of cutting into and hollowing out the "dollars" circulating in trade. Ultimately, of course, many of the foreign dollar-sized coins were melted and cast into traditional silver ingots—the Chinese "sycee."

Meanwhile, many Oriental bankers and merchants found it expedient to impress their own markings onto coins as a method of checking and guaranteeing each piece. Thus, we find all sorts of series of silver dollar-sized coins so "chopmarked," most commonly the 8-real pieces of Spanish America, particularly Mexico. Far more scarce are those fraudulent pieces that the practice of chopmarking was intended to eliminate.

Three pieces of a doctored 1894 Japanese yen (ANA Museum Accession No. 1996.7.1) survive, illustrating how the obverse and adjoining rim of the silver dollar-sized coin was hollowed out (top left) and filled with a solder compound (top right). The reverse of another coin was cut off and planed down (bottom right), then attached to complete the fraud.

One unusual example of a trade coin that was hollowed out and then later detected is a Japanese silver yen of Meiji Year 27 (1894), donated by Colorado Springs coin dealer Don Holocek. In its present state, this coin has been broken into three fragments, permitting observation of its manufacture. The reverse of a standard yen was cut off and planed down to a thickness of about .10mm. An obverse and adjoining rim from another coin were hollowed out and filled with a solder compound, to which the reverse was then attached.

The weight of the coin is 27.159g as opposed to the standard 26.956g for a normal piece—not too bad for such a substantial alteration. More than 22 million Year-27 yen pieces were struck, making this the most common date of the issue. Perhaps this very familiarity may have been a factor in its selection for tampering, its ordinary nature making it seem less suspicious. Many early Japanese yen were melted down after they were demonetized in 1897. Might this coin have been detected, defaced and rejected at that time? Many unfinished stories of economic byways survive to pique our curiosity through the medium of money! •

The curator's chair is endowed by the Kenneth Keith Memorial Fund. Since the American Numismatic Association is a tax-exempt organization under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, all donations—both of cash and of material with established "fair market value"—qualify as charitable contributions for income tax purposes. It All Began With Coins

The United States Mint Introduces The Smithsonian 150th Anniversary Commemorative Gold And Silver Coins

It all began when 104,960 British gold sovereigns arrived in America. A gift to our country from the estate of James Smithson, a Briton who never set foot in our land. Since British currency was not legal tender here, the United States Mint melted down the sovereigns and reminted them as Goddess of Liberty 10-Dollar Gold Coins. These coins helped finance the institution whose 150th Anniversary we celebrate today: the Smithsonian Institution.

Own the year's most eagerly awaited coins

Once again, the U.S. Mint is proud to offer a limited number of coins for the Smithsonian: 100,000 gold five-dollar and 650,000 silver dollar coins. The coins' designs are as memorable as the event itself. The reverse of the proof gold five-dollar coin, for example, features an exciting departure from most proof coins: The Smithsonian sunburst will be incused and mirror-finished, and the background frosted.

Help preserve James Smithson's living legacy

A portion of the proceeds from the sale of these coins will help the Smithsonian expand and enhance its collections. A percentage will go to the National Numismatic Collection for acquisitions, new displays and other improvements.

And remember: You never pay an additional delivery charge when you order from the United States Mint.
